

Disclosure Project Intelligence Archive - Module Two

Executive Summary

Adapted from an oral presentation by Dr. Greer - March 2024

Disclosure and Accountability in Covert Government Operations Related to UFOs and Advanced Technologies

This module is taken from a live event in March of 2024, and highlights longstanding covert activities within the U.S. government related to UFOs and advanced technologies, emphasizing the need for transparency and accountability.

From the onset of such projects, there have been significant advancements in technologies, such as gravity control and energy systems, capable of transforming global energy and transportation infrastructures. Discovered in the mid-20th century, these technologies could extract energy from the quantum vacuum, potentially obviating conventional energy sources, which has led to their suppression to protect industrial and financial interests.

Historical manipulation by covert entities has involved staging extraterrestrial events to control public perception and policy. This deception has been perpetuated through psychological warfare, misinformation, and the use of advanced biotechnologies to create Programmed Life Forms (PLFs), which mimic extraterrestrial beings. Such operations are aimed at justifying national security measures and perpetuating the power of the military-industrial complex.

The ethical and legal implications of these secretive projects are profound, involving staged alien invasions and the potential for catastrophic misuse of technologies that could disrupt global stability. The documents call for urgent legal and governmental intervention to curb these practices, which include manipulating public sentiment through fear, to preventing misuse of technology that could lead to catastrophic global consequences.

Despite the gravity and potential impact of these projects, there has been a consistent failure within government circles to adequately address or investigate these issues. Panels and committees that have been established, ostensibly to study UFO phenomena and advanced technologies, have been compromised by corruption, with key members systematically excluded from access to truthful information.

The information as presented underscores the importance of protecting whistleblowers who come forward with sensitive information about these operations. Dr. Greer and his team have faced significant challenges and threats due to their efforts to expose these activities. The lack of protection and serious consideration for these whistleblowers reflects a broader issue of systemic corruption and the manipulation of scientific and media narratives.

As the Director of the Global Disclosure Movement, Dr. Greer emphasizes that it is not his responsibility to oversee such investigations but that of the public and responsible authorities.

In conclusion, this module advocates for a comprehensive reevaluation of these secretive projects and the implementation of robust measures to ensure transparency and accountability. It calls for the involvement of international leaders and global cooperation to address the implications of these technologies and operations, emphasizing the need for an open and honest dialogue about their existence and impact.

DPIA-2024

INDIVIDUALS ARE NOW AUTHORIZED TO DISCLOSE INFORMATION WITHOUT FACING LEGAL PENALTIES. The projects they may expose have been deemed illegal. Any supposedly classified information related to these illegal projects can be brought forward, as these classifications are considered invalid due to the unlawful nature of the projects themselves.

ANY POTENTIAL WHISTLEBLOWERS NOW HAVE PROTECTION. This protection removes any previous barriers to coming forward with information, whether it involves material evidence (bodies, metals, etc.), documents, or methods related to these undisclosed criminal enterprises which legally LACK ANY LEGITIMATE NATIONAL SECURITY CLAIMS.

THIS IS A CALL TO ACTION, aimed at those who have been hesitant, by providing them the security assurances needed to disclose information that could be crucial in addressing and correcting clandestine and unauthorized activities.

This module reviews several general categories, particularly focusing on those that provide an overarching view. While a number of these categories have already been addressed in briefings prepared for the law enforcement team to ensure they have sufficient intelligence for their operations, this module is more relevant to the general public.

The initial topic concerns the mechanisms and historical evolution of secrecy surrounding this subject and traces how the secrecy developed, starting from significant events in the 1940s, including encounters with what were known during World War II as Foo Fighters, that were tracked by U.S. military intelligence.

These insights explore how the management of this information has evolved into the present day.

The name Foo Fighters was originally derived from the mysterious luminous objects that zipped around aircraft during World War II. Dr. Greer had a friend, Dr. John Altschuler, now deceased, who was the nephew of General Jimmy Doolittle. Gen. Doolittle, a well-regarded figure from World War II, was sent to the European theater by President Roosevelt to investigate these phenomena. Upon his return, he reportedly informed President Roosevelt that these objects were "interplanetary vehicles," a revelation believed to have occurred around 1942 to 1944.

Around the same time, there were experimental uses of Tesla scalar systems, even before electromagnetic pulse (EMP) systems were developed. There were several downed objects during this period, including a well-documented incident in 1942.

There is substantial evidence to suggest that such incidents predated 1942, as indicated by documented dissections - correctly termed because the subjects were non-human intelligences, while the term 'autopsy' is used when dissecting a human. An image from a dissection, dated between 1920 and 1927 is located in the archives.

[\[image link\]](#)

There are classified black files on the subject of UFOs dating back to the late 1800s that have never been released. Despite the common belief that documents are automatically declassified after a certain number of years, this does not apply to illegal black projects. Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) officers do not have access to these documents, so they remain hidden from the public.

Such highly classified and secretive programs investigating these phenomena evolved from the early and mid-20th century, through World War II, and beyond. During this period, significant material was collected for study, leading to major advances. One such advancement involved an influential billionaire named Paul Mellon, along with Allen Dulles and General Patton. Allen Dulles went on to be one of the founders of the CIA and was appointed CIA Director by President Dwight Eisenhower.

At the end of World War II, according to John Warner IV, grandson of Paul Mellon and son of Senator John Warner, Paul Mellon secured a Nazi aircraft known as the "Nazi disk," distinct from the well-documented Nazi Bell.

This disc utilized electrogravitic technology, involving high voltage electrical fields that create a space-time bubble, enabling gravity annihilation and control. Although the Nazis did not perfect this technology, it represented a significant advancement.

Many of these brilliant aerospace minds were later integrated into the U.S. intelligence and military sectors through Operation Paperclip. This operation involved placing a paper clip on the files of valuable scientists to exempt them from execution at the Nuremberg Trials, thereby preserving their expertise for U.S. purposes. These individuals were brought into the U.S. under the auspices of the OSS (Office of Strategic Services), which later became the CIA.

This influx of talent coincided with pivotal events such as the famous Roswell incident in New Mexico. Within months of this event, the CIA was established, and the Air Force was created as a separate branch from the U.S. Army Air Forces.

These developments were crucial in reshaping the structure of intelligence and military operations in the United States.

The evolution of technology through the study of extraterrestrial objects, initially, the understanding of the energy and propulsion systems of these objects was limited. However, advancements were made by studying the experimental and unfinished Nazi disk.

The pivotal moment came when more than one extraterrestrial vehicle was downed, allowing researchers to acquire and study those that were not completely destroyed and still had functional components.

The technological insights gained from the Nazi disk were combined with those from the study and reverse engineering of the extraterrestrial material. This research was conducted by a group of scientists who had also been involved in the Manhattan Project and the development of the atomic bomb. This group included notable figures such as Dr. Edward Teller and Dr. Wernher von Braun, who came to the U.S. under Operation Paperclip, and other highly accomplished scientists. These individuals were tasked with studying these materials in secrecy.

A document known as the Wilbur Smith Document, which falls under the Canadian subcategory of government documents, reveals that by 1950, the Canadians were trying to decipher the activities of the U.S. program. It had become increasingly secretive between 1945 and 1950 and intelligence from Wilbur Smith helped shed light on it, making the document from 1950 one of the most significant historical records in this context.

This notable document reveals its date and contains four significant conclusions on the second page. Originally classified as top secret, this document was accidentally declassified in Canada and subsequently made its way to Dr. Greer. He received not only this document but also a substantial file from the family members of Wilbur Smith, all of which is now archived.

[\[documents link\]](#)

On the second page of this document, a key point states that this matter is the most highly classified subject in the U.S. government, rated even higher than the H-bomb. To put this in perspective, the hydrogen bomb, or thermonuclear bomb, was not detonated until 1952. This document is from 1950 and suggests that the secrets surrounding UFOs were considered more critical than even the development of what was then considered the ultimate doomsday weapon.

The document explicitly states that "Flying saucers exist." During that era, UFOs were commonly referred to as flying saucers, largely due to their disk-shaped appearances. Additionally, it notes that their modus operandi is unknown but a concentrated effort to understand them is being led by Dr. Vannevar Bush, a key figure who also directed the Manhattan Project.

This indicates a repurposing of many scientists from the atomic and hydrogen bomb projects to this even more sensitive project, leveraging their proven track record in science and secrecy.

The document concludes that the matter is considered by U.S. authorities to be of tremendous significance. This official document now publicly released - likely by accident - confirms the serious attention the U.S. government paid to UFOs.

This document is particularly vital because of its historical context and the explicit acknowledgment of the importance of UFOs, making it an essential piece of evidence for understanding governmental acknowledgment of UFOs' existence and sensitivity.

This is not a minor revelation or speculative leak; it is a documented and significant acknowledgment from a reliable government source.

The document further details the role of Wilbur Smith, the official who compiled the report. Smith had access to operations in the United States through backchannels and was tasked with conveying this sensitive information to his Canadian counterparts in the intelligence and military communities in 1950.

This document, along with thousands of others in Dr. Greer's possession, emphasizes the profound level of secrecy and strategic importance that government authorities place on UFO-related phenomena.

The changes that shifted the program from one that was initially sanctioned under President Truman and known to President Eisenhower - both of whom were briefed on highly confidential matters involving extraterrestrial biological entities, referred to as EBEs or "Ebens."

It is reported through reliable sources that Truman and his senior team were approached by these entities who proposed halting the development of destructive weapons in exchange for assistance in developing technology for a sustainable, peaceful planet.

This offer, however, was rejected because the stipulation required the U.S. to disarm its weapons of mass destruction, a condition that was not well understood at the time in terms of why the extraterrestrial civilizations were so insistent.

An important aspect to remember is the nature of the electromagnetic pulses (EMPs) emitted by atomic detonations, which are well known. However, as discussed by experts like Dr. Perry and highlighted in the archive, there is also a scalar signal associated with nuclear detonations.

Nikola Tesla, who worked on scalar technology through the 1920s until his death in 1943, described scalar energy: unlike regular electromagnetic frequencies that propagate as waves, scalar signals operate through longitudinal points that extend multiples of the speed of light, reaching into the quantum entangled level of the cosmos where all points in space and time are interconnected.

When the first atomic bomb was detonated, not only did it emit an electromagnetic pulse capable of disrupting electrical communications, but it also tore the fabric of the universe, affecting interstellar communications and travel. This is why, following the detonation, there was an influx of ET activity, with large numbers and significant sightings, as these civilizations were deeply concerned about the implications of humanity's experimentation with such powerful technologies.

Truman, driven by the geopolitical competition with the Soviet Union and later China, was furious at the proposal to halt the development of nuclear technologies, and the race to advance these capabilities continued unabated.

Despite proposals from extraterrestrial entities, the U.S. government declined to abandon its advanced weapons projects, leading to a stalemate between humans and extraterrestrials. President Eisenhower, who took office in January 1953, was fully briefed on these issues, continuing the high level of secrecy initiated by President Truman. Key members of Congress were also aware, highlighting the early days of a highly classified yet legally sanctioned black program, more secret than the hydrogen bomb.

It is important to distinguish between a black project and an illegal project. The former is classified but not illegal if it has presidential and congressional oversight, specifically from the select group known as the "Gang of Eight" - the chairs and co-chairs of the key Intelligence and Armed Services committees.

The secrecy was driven by the recognition that the technologies behind these extraterrestrial objects were far beyond atomic or thermonuclear capabilities, appealing immensely to the military-industrial complex, as termed by Eisenhower.

As World War II ended, operations focused on studying these technologies and conducting more retrievals of downed extraterrestrial crafts intensified, particularly in remote western areas like White Sands.

Contrary to UFO subculture myths suggesting that interstellar spacecraft could not navigate electrical storms, such as those alleged at Roswell in 1947, these craft were actually brought down by scalar weapons. This is supported by a document from Guy Hottel to FBI Director Herbert Hoover, which is not contested. Because of its importance, it appears in the archive in its original form but also retyped because of damage to the original.

This document notes that a new radar system had been activated around the time of the Roswell incident. However, in intelligence and military terms, "radar" often refers to systems that can act as both surveillance and active weapons platforms, meaning they could launch scalar attacks on extraterrestrial vehicles.

These early radar systems were still experimental but capable of disabling an ET vehicle when it was in a three-dimensional state. When vehicles transition to or from interstellar travel, they are not in solid form but rather in a trans dimensional space-time, which allows for faster-than-light travel.

[\[science and tech brief\]](#)

This detailed historical overview is crucial. Between 1955 and 1960, significant shifts occurred, affecting the trajectory of U.S. engagements with extraterrestrial technologies and their concealment under layers of classified operations.

The oversight and governance of extraterrestrial-related issues shifted due to a growing mistrust in political leaders by military and financial industrial interests, who began to exclude those political leaders from briefings on developments occurring during President Eisenhower's second term.

This mistrust intensified around 1956, a fact confirmed by documents from the French Ministry of Defense. They verify that Eisenhower had a significant meeting with extraterrestrials, referred to as "Ebens," in the California desert near the location of the current Edwards Air Force Base, which did not exist at that time.

During this meeting, the extraterrestrials attempted to persuade Eisenhower to stand down the weapons of mass destruction that were disrupting communication and travel for ET vehicles. Although Eisenhower was initially receptive to these requests, the financial and military-industrial sectors strongly opposed any such actions, effectively isolating him when they realized he might not fully support their agenda.

This led to a significant act of treason, which has not been rectified as of March 2024. From that point, the governance of these issues saw the U.S. President and key members of Congress effectively sidelined, and programs that were once legally sanctioned black projects became illegal operations. These unauthorized activities have continued and worsened over the past 65 years, posing a substantial problem that Dr. Greer has been attempting to address.

In his farewell speech, Eisenhower famously cautioned against the influence of the military-industrial complex - a term coined by him, despite his background as a five-star general and a Republican president, not by countercultural figures of the 1960s.

[\[video link\]](#)

Individuals close to Eisenhower, such as actor Jackie Gleason and White House Signal Corps member Stephen Lovekin, confirmed Eisenhower's deep frustration with having lost control over these projects. This loss of oversight prompted Eisenhower to warn of the dangers that such secrecy posed to democracy.

The significant challenge for the public, Congress, and the White House is to understand the historical context, which is crucial for grasping how we arrived at the current situation.

The dilemma faced by U.S. presidents upon learning they have lost control of covert programs is profound.

Initially, Presidents Eisenhower and Truman were fully briefed on these matters. However, Eisenhower was gradually sidelined, and by the time President Kennedy took office in January 1961, he received information from Eisenhower and others about these secretive operations.

A significant UFO sighting was reported in the newspapers during Kennedy's flight to Berlin for his famous "Ich bin ein Berliner" speech, which he and the Chief Steward aboard Air Force One discussed. An audio recording of this conversation, which Dr. Greer made with the now-deceased steward, is preserved in the archive.

[\[audio link\]](#)

In this recording, Kennedy expressed his frustration, stating that the matter was out of his hands, and he did not understand why.

This sense of exclusion from crucial information prompted President Kennedy, along with his brother and Attorney General, Robert Kennedy, to intensify their scrutiny of the CIA and its clandestine activities. This period included the Bay of Pigs fiasco, which nearly cost Kennedy his presidency and highlighted the CIA's failures or possible deliberate sabotages.

At the time of his assassination, President Kennedy was actively working to regain control and potentially dissolve these covert programs and even restructure the CIA itself. This effort is confirmed by Bobby Kennedy Jr., who stated that his uncle was moving through the executive review process to issue orders that would dissolve these programs.

Efforts to dismantle covert power structures within the U.S. government may have contributed to President Kennedy's assassination, indicating a possible link between his intentions to disrupt secretive operations and his untimely death. This situation highlights a significant and ongoing conflict at the highest levels of U.S. governance over control of highly sensitive and potentially extraterrestrial-related projects.

Dr. Greer has communicated with two individuals directly involved in these operations; one is still living while the other has passed away. These individuals are highly sensitive and not available for interviews, so their testimonies are not included in the archive.

It's important to note that the archive, which lists 755 whistleblowers and witnesses, does not encompass all individuals Dr. Greer has debriefed over the years. Many of these individuals have chosen not to disclose their identities or any details publicly.

The individual who passed away handled the logistics of the operation, while the surviving individual, now elderly, was directly involved as one of the gunmen. This person was subsequently promoted within an organization known as the Majority Joint Intelligence Committee (MAJIC), which oversees UFO and extraterrestrial issues. He remains active in the field, though he is preparing to step down. He is currently training his successors, including Luis Elizondo.

This complex backdrop reflects the intense emotional and operational strains experienced by leaders and operatives alike within these secretive circles, emphasizing the profound challenges and dangers associated with governance and oversight of such classified projects.

A notable document involving Marilyn Monroe is linked to President Kennedy and the extraterrestrial issue. The document, known as the Marilyn Monroe document, includes sensitive content about her relationship with President Kennedy and his brother. During their private conversations, often referred to as "pillow talk," President Kennedy shared classified information with Monroe about extraterrestrial objects from New Mexico dating back to the 1940s, as well as other sensitive topics like Cuban affairs.

As rumors of their affair began to surface and potentially scandalize the Kennedy brothers, they decided to end their communications with Monroe to protect their political careers. However, Monroe was furious about the severed ties and threatened to hold a press conference to expose what she had learned from Kennedy. This led to heightened concerns among those in power about the potential repercussions of her disclosures.

The document in question includes a wiretap transcript of a conversation between Monroe and a friend, which reveals her intentions to go public with the information. The original document is listed under Project Moondust, marked as "top secret."

This wiretap was not just an isolated incident; it was part of a broader effort by the LAPD's intelligence division in cooperation with the CIA, a detail Dr. Greer learned from meeting someone knowledgeable about the operation.

At the bottom of this summary of the wiretap, the document is signed by James Jesus Angleton, highlighting the level of surveillance and the lengths to which government agencies went to monitor and control sensitive information leaks.

This scenario underscores the intense measures taken to maintain secrecy around highly classified projects and the personal and public consequences of such secrecy.

James Jesus Angleton III was a key figure at the CIA, known for his relentless pursuit of moles within the agency and his readiness to engage in wetworks, i.e. assassinations. Angleton was responsible for eliminating any threats to highly sensitive national security secrets. The notion that such 'kill lists' exist is often dismissed as naive by those unfamiliar with the depths of covert operations.

Marilyn Monroe tragically became entangled in these dangerous machinations. By the time she realized the severity of her situation, it was too late. It is widely believed that she was killed, and drugs were subsequently planted in her system to simulate an overdose. Investigations suggest that the drugs had not been digested or absorbed by her system at the time of her death, indicating that she was already deceased when they were administered.

Years later, Burl Ives, a renowned actor and singer who served on Dr. Greer's executive committee, and his wife, Dorothy, who knew Monroe, hosted discussions where Ives confirmed the belief within their circle that Monroe had been murdered. The motive, however, remained unclear until Dr. Greer presented him with the document outlining the reasons behind her death.

This revelation underscored the lethal nature of the forces at play during that era, spanning the mid-1940s to the early 1960s.

The document, dated just days before Monroe was found dead, reflects the extreme measures taken to safeguard national security secrets, a practice that sends a chilling message across the military, CIA, and political spheres. It effectively discourages any deviation from the line, resembling the tactics of a criminal mafia: threatening severe repercussions to ensure compliance.

Such activities became almost institutionalized as a form of protocol within certain sectors of the government, leading to numerous killings, particularly those investigating the Kennedy assassination. The rampant leaks and the subsequent need to silence those seeking the truth led to a policy of total secrecy. This "if you know, I'll kill you" philosophy has led to a significant disconnect between the Constitutional Government of the United States and the covert organizations managing these programs, with elected officials often kept in the dark to prevent them from interfering with the covert agenda.

In the early days of U.S. government UFO investigations, there were documents referred to as the MJ-12 documents. While their authenticity has not been verified, they are believed to have evolved into what was initially known as the Majority Intelligence Committee, abbreviated as MJ-12, and later termed MAGIC or MAGI.

[\[document link\]](#)

These documents detail the operations of a top-tier management group responsible for overseeing UAP (Unidentified Aerial Phenomena), UFOs, extraterrestrial intelligence, and related projects from 1956 to the present. This group has assumed control over the narrative and management of these sensitive subjects.

This control has led to a complete collapse of constitutional oversight, a situation that is both understandable and deeply problematic, bordering on treasonous. Context for how these secretive operations have evolved from the 1940s to March 2024, highlight the significant changes in government interaction with extraterrestrial phenomena.

The history of presidential intelligence on UFOs, beginning with President Roosevelt and continuing through to the current administration, identifies a critical turning point when it was determined that politicians and most personnel within the CIA and Pentagon could not be trusted with this sensitive information. This decision marked a substantial shift in how these matters were managed.

Fast forwarding to the present, there is an ongoing narrative maintained by certain individuals within the government and military-industrial complex, claiming ignorance of the origins and functionalities of these technologies. Figures like Christopher Mellon and Luis Elizondo are mentioned as part of disinformation efforts, particularly following the significant impact of the documentary Unacknowledged, which reached nearly 800 million viewers.

These efforts are designed to mislead senators, representatives, and White House staff about the true nature of UFO and extraterrestrial technologies.

In conclusion, this analysis is crucial for understanding by officials in the Pentagon, CIA, White House, and the general public, emphasizing the need for a resolution to this ongoing secrecy crisis.

In reviewing this historical context, it's important to note the contributions of a very senior government scientist, Dr. Richard Foch, who has since passed away. He was the second highest-ranking official at the Naval Research Labs (NRL) in Washington, D.C., the largest Department of Defense laboratory globally.

Foch held high security clearances, routinely briefed vice presidents, and spent his career working in Secure Compartmented Information Facilities (SCIFs). He had access to what's called The Vault, a SCIF where highly classified documents were stored.

Among these documents, he discovered evidence confirming that as early as October 1954, the U.S. had achieved mastery over gravity control. This mastery over gravity control, involving technologies capable of maneuvering objects at incredible speeds and directions, marked a significant development.

This advancement made certain elements within the government even more determined to exclude the president and key members of Congress from sensitive information. This secrecy stemmed partly from the propulsion systems used in these technologies, which required no conventional fuel sources such as oil or jet fuel and were not reliant on batteries for energy, despite their capabilities of flying objects at speeds up to 300,000 miles per hour.

These technologies, first discovered in the late 1800s through the 1920s, were believed to tap into what is now known as quantum vacuum energy or zero-point energy, extracting energy from the fabric of space itself. This concept aligns with Nikola Tesla's description of an infinite energy field and Professor Dirac's reference to the Dirac Sea - a boundless sea of energy available for exploitation.

These insights underline the profound implications of such technologies and the reasons behind the stringent secrecy surrounding them.

The acknowledgment of the enormous financial and industrial implications of publicly disclosing certain technologies has always been recognized by influential industrialists. Individuals like Paul Mellon, who were pivotal in retrieving the Nazi disk and establishing the CIA with Alan Dulles, had significant vested interests.

Notably, Mellon was a strong supporter of Adolf Hitler and the Third Reich, like other prominent figures of the time such as Henry Ford and Prescot Bush, George H.W. Bush's father, as well as Watson of IBM. This support is a matter of historical record and reflects their ideologies.

After losing World War II, these figures sought to continue their agenda covertly, utilizing advanced science and technology as their new battleground. This approach was not just about power and wealth - the traditional roots of evil and drivers of global dynamics - but also about controlling emerging technologies that could redefine the future.

Significantly, the scientific prowess of the era, including that of Nikola Tesla whose confidential papers were seized by the FBI after his death, and the advancements made by Nazi scientists, were co-opted into these covert projects. The focus was on harnessing quantum vacuum energy and zero-point energy, which were described in historical documents as tapping into a boundless sea of energy.

[\[document link\]](#)

The technologies developed involved electrophoresis and the Biefeld-Brown effect, which demonstrated that high-voltage fields could levitate objects, a phenomenon tested as early as 1928-1929.

These innovations represented a century of lost opportunities, as documented in The Lost Century. This film highlights how such technologies, if disclosed, could potentially revolutionize our world by saving the biosphere and eradicating poverty - a stark contrast to the secretive and controlled application envisioned by those with power and financial stakes.

[\[link to film\]](#)

The prospect of introducing transformative technologies in the mid-20th century posed a significant financial threat, potentially impacting the revenue of every major Fortune 500 corporation involved in transportation, energy, and utilities - amounting to losses in the trillions of dollars.

This potential disruption, which would have rendered technologies like internal combustion engines and power plants obsolete, was recognized as early as the 1940s and 50s, and remains relevant today due to the enduring nature of these industries.

The political, financial, and institutional powers of the time decided to avoid the upheaval such technologies would cause. Unlike what is typically considered disruptive technology, such as advancements from Silicon Valley or developments in AI, the technologies Dr. Greer refers to would lead to fundamental changes in the global infrastructure.

For instance, in 1955, the Eisenhower Interstate System was implemented, ironically just a year after such infrastructure became unnecessary due to advancements in transportation technology that would eliminate the need for surface roads.

[\[document link\]](#)

While some leaders, like Eisenhower in his second term and the Kennedy brothers, wanted to address these issues more openly, they were often silenced or disregarded by other powers within the government. Bobby Kennedy, for example, expressed his intention to address this matter if he won the presidency in 1968. He acknowledged the significance of the UFO issue in a letter to a prominent UFO researcher, confirming his commitment to explore it further.

[\[document link\]](#)

Unfortunately, his assassination in June 1968 abruptly halted these plans.

In the early stages of UFO research, documents such as the MJ-12 papers surfaced, hinting at a secret collective called MAJIC or Majority Joint Intelligence Committee, tasked with managing UFO phenomena and extraterrestrial intelligence. This group, evolving from the 1956 era, effectively took over the narrative and control of related technologies, sidelining constitutional oversight and establishing an environment where political and intelligence figures were systematically excluded from knowledge on these matters.

Throughout his decades of advocacy, Dr. Greer has thus far been unable to convince a single president or Congress member to confront this clandestine power structure. Despite the readiness of Special Forces and defectors from these covert programs to expose the truth, political leaders have yet to take decisive action and probably won't unless spurred by an imminent crisis that forces the issue.

This entrenched secrecy extended to technologies developed from extraterrestrial materials and advanced propulsion systems, as early as 1954. By the 1980s, technologies that could manipulate gravity for propulsion were showcased to elite members of the military-industrial complex at classified exhibitions.

One such display was witnessed by Brad Sorensen at Norton Air Force Base in 1988. This event displayed not only conventional aircraft but also what were termed Alien Reproduction Vehicles (ARVs), showcasing the advancements in man-made UFOs. Today they are simply called ATs, advanced technologies, a euphemism for the man-made UFOs.

Documents from 1953, including those from CIA Director General William B. Smith, discussed the psychological warfare potential of UFO secrecy, focusing on manipulating public perception and reinforcing the cover-up.

This strategic manipulation aimed to shape the public's beliefs by diverting attention from the facts while maintaining the veil of secrecy around the advanced technologies developed from extraterrestrial interactions.

The event witnessed by Brad Sorensen displayed these conventional yet unusual aircraft, dating from the late 1950s to early 60s. They incorporated components from the Mercury spacecraft, not for propulsion, but for their sophisticated instrumentation. This repurposing of technology from manned space missions is quite common in experimental aircraft design.

Among these designs were three notable crafts, informally referred to as baby, mama, and daddy, varying in size from approximately 25 to 100 feet in diameter.

The official moon landing occurred in 1969, yet the technology showcased at the air show in 1988 seemed antiquated by then. They exhibited scorch marks that allegedly came from travel throughout the solar system sometime between 1959 and the early 60s, suggesting extensive testing or usage beyond typical aeronautical capabilities.

These demonstrations were not just about showcasing past achievements but also about securing more funding to advance these already highly developed technologies. There is old film footage in the archive depicting UFOs that appear to flutter down like leaves.

[\[film links\]](#)

These were actually home movies from people who captured early experimental attempts to operate these ARV crafts. The public misinterpretation of these as alien crafts served as a convenient cover.

This introduces the topic of deception and counterintelligence, where advanced technology is deployed in such a way that leads the public to believe it is extraterrestrial, thus obscuring the true origins and capabilities of the technology.

The technologies powering these objects represent a far greater secret than the mere presence of multiple extraterrestrial civilizations visiting Earth. The real magnitude of the secret lies in the technologies themselves.

The organization controlling this information prefers the public to focus on the alien narratives, aligning with their explanations of why these aliens are here, which serves their broader agenda of maintaining secrecy and control.

The majority of what is presented in retail ufology and reporting - around 90% - is designed to mislead the public, functioning as a psychological operation (PSYOP). The authorities behind these operations are content to perpetuate these misleading narratives. However, they strictly oppose any public acknowledgment of the existence of advanced technologies in covert human hands.

Revealing these technologies would prompt critical thinkers to question why, if not for flight, the underlying energy technologies aren't utilized to replace fossil fuels, thereby eradicating global poverty, and rescuing the biosphere.

The real potential of these technologies could transform them into stationary power plants that could render traditional energy sources like oil, gas, and coal obsolete. Yet, this transformation is staunchly resisted because it conflicts with entrenched industrial interests. Phrases like "what's good for GM is good for America" reflect a time when corporate interests often aligned with national interests, but in this context, it signifies the deep-seated resistance from financial and industrial sectors that benefit from maintaining the status quo.

These industrial, military, and intelligence sectors effectively dictate policies, possessing far greater power and financial resources than the White House, Congress, or the Pentagon. Essentially, the U.S. discretionary budget is minuscule in comparison to the wealth controlled by these entities.

This situation is fundamentally about maintaining power. Those who have it are unwilling to relinquish it by allowing revolutionary technologies that could fundamentally change industries like aerospace and shipping, which still rely on antiquated, environmentally damaging technologies, some of which have not advanced since the 1800s.

The immense sums, trillions of dollars, spent on ineffective environmental and poverty solutions, highlight the tragic misallocation of resources that could otherwise fund truly transformative technologies.

Taxpayers have already funded these technologies which are controlled by criminal, treasonous, and murderous groups. Addressing this situation poses a significant challenge for the White House, Congress, and the American public.

And there are greater applications of these technologies beyond mere space exploration.

A Central Intelligence Agency document from 1953, signed by CIA Director Smith, illustrates the perceived psychological warfare value of these technologies. This document suggests staging events, via stagecraft, to portray extraterrestrial life as a threat, thereby manipulating public perception and justifying the allocation of trillions of dollars towards both overt and covert projects.

Dr. Greer came into possession of this document in the 1990s. It details strategies for psychological warfare as well as intelligence and operations related to the UFO issue. It helped shape covert programs as secretive as the R&D efforts aimed at reverse engineering extraterrestrial crafts.

These programs began to deploy early man-made UFOs to orchestrate staged alien contact events, also known as abductions. The case of Betty and Barney Hill is one such early example. The narrative of extraterrestrial abductions was fabricated using man-made crafts and stagecraft techniques, designed to mimic alien abductions.

This manipulation aimed to confuse the public's understanding of genuine extraterrestrial contact experiences, which were peaceful, like those that Dr. Greer facilitates through CE5 contact methods.

The shift in narrative towards depicting aliens as hostile invaders, allegedly harming humans and posing a national security threat, justified secretive operations and substantial funding for defense initiatives such as Star Wars and the Space Force. This strategy emerged around 1952-1953 when the U.S. had operational alien reproduction vehicles (ARVs) and were ready to deploy them.

By creating a climate of fear around the UFO phenomenon, the covert forces intended to dissuade the public from exploring the subject. These plans involved staging attacks, abductions, and animal mutilations, with Delta Force and other operatives using ARVs to execute these acts.

Dr. Greer had met numerous individuals involved in these operations years before the advent of robotic "aliens" commonly referred to as "grays." Instead, small-statured humans were disguised using Hollywood-style makeup and stagecraft and deployed to abduct people who witnessed unauthorized activities or ventured too close to secretive operations.

These abductees were subjected to drugs, hallucinogens, and advanced electromagnetic technologies similar to those associated with Havana syndrome, before being returned with manipulated memories.

While genuine extraterrestrial-human interactions have occurred, they are rare and overshadowed by numerous staged incidents meant to obfuscate and confuse public and official understanding. Dr. Greer's efforts aim to differentiate authentic encounters from manufactured ones.

U.S. Presidents Ronald Reagan and Donald Trump were directly misled and manipulated by counterintelligence operatives, who fed them false information to influence certain government policy regarding UFOs and extraterrestrial interactions.

Media figures like Tucker Carlson have also been misled by presentations of man-made events designed to mimic extraterrestrial activities, leading them to draw incorrect conclusions about extraterrestrial encounters. This strategy is part of a sophisticated effort that originated in the early 1950s and has evolved significantly over the decades as technologies have advanced.

The testimony of disclosure witness, Fred Bell, who in 1953 at a classified Air Force base in Cannes, observed an ashtray being teleported from one part of the base to the other, highlighting the advanced nature and hidden capabilities of the technology being concealed.

This brief historical overview serves to illustrate the extent of these counterintelligence operations.

The extent of technological advancements that resemble teleportation, similar to what is depicted in Star Trek, were reliably achieved as early as the 1940s. While many are familiar with the Philadelphia Experiment, the actual activities took place in Rhode Island, with the Philadelphia label serving as a cover story. Albert Einstein was involved in these experiments in the 1940s.

As technology has advanced, so too has the capacity for deception. These advanced capabilities allow for the staging of events that are then misrepresented as extraterrestrial. These staged events are often reported within the UFO subculture and by some fringe media outlets as alien activities. A book titled "An Alien Harvest," which discusses animal mutilations, is an example of how such incidents are framed within the context of supposed ET involvement.

These animal mutilations have in fact been covert human operations. By creating scenarios that instill fear, those in power - whether religious leaders, politicians, military officials, or dictators - exploit a fundamental human response: fear. Fear causes individuals to bypass their analytical reasoning and higher spiritual states, reacting instead with a primal fight-or-flight response.

This manipulation of fear is a technique well understood and utilized by those skilled in psychological warfare, making it a significant tool in their arsenal, especially in matters related to UFO phenomena. The study of these biological factors, which are distinct from studies related to electromagnetic, propulsion, and teleportation technologies, was happening as early as 1952-53.

Advancements in biotechnology that began in the 1960s and continued through the 1970s and 80s, up to the present, involve manipulating biological systems at the nanomolecular level in order to create entities known as Programmed Life Forms (PLFs). These PLFs are not merely robots or costumed humans but are bioengineered entities with integrated circuits in their cerebral cortex, and grown in containment vessels.

[\[image link\]](#)

Dr. Greer has met with multiple independent sources, including physicists who have had access to underground bases both in the United States and at Pine Gap in Australia, confirming the existence of these facilities where PLFs are developed. These sources, who do not know each other, provide corroborating testimonies about these bioengineered creatures, enhancing their credibility.

[\[document links\]](#)

Over the decades, these PLFs have become increasingly sophisticated, making them more convincing as "aliens" than earlier, more robotic versions, especially to observers who have not been subjected to any form of manipulation or drugging.

[\[image link\]](#)

The intense pressures and unethical tactics used to silence individuals with sensitive information is a common tactic. One of Dr. Greer's top-secret witnesses, who was prepared to come forward with information for AARO (All Domain Anomaly Resolution Office) and the Senate Intelligence briefing, withdrew his cooperation after being intimidated. Men in a van approached the witness, showed him his phone and computer, which had been manipulated to display child pornography. Threatening him with lifelong imprisonment and the loss of his children, they coerced him into silence.

This type of operation and similar, albeit less extreme ops happen on a daily basis. Recently, a different-yet-similar psychological operation targeted a member of Congress. Unfortunately, she believed the deceit, which is concerning. Such gullibility is akin to failing an IQ test.

Some PLF creatures, resembling what many would call "grays" ETs, are actually modeled after real entities. This modeling is a critical point of concern.

A man who had participated in retrieval teams for both man-made UFOs and actual extraterrestrial ones came to a stark realization about the malevolent nature of these operations during his first encounter with a genuine ET craft. He demanded to be relieved from his duties at the Northern Nevada test range in the 2000s. Fortuitously, he managed to escape the usually fatal consequences of defection, thanks to a highly placed uncle in the command structure who facilitated his safe exit.

Ordinarily, individuals involved in such operations are considered lifelong assets who could be eliminated if they defect. This is why when Dr. Greer was visiting black sites in California, his security driver at the time, a participant in these covert systems, expressed gratitude for Dr. Greer's efforts, acknowledging the difficult position of those trapped in such unlawful activities.

Even though the man mentioned above as part of the retrieval team managed a rare escape from the secretive operations, he continued to face intimidation tactics. As he was driving back to his home in the Northern Midwest, his car was halted by a man-made triangular craft, which Dr. Greer identified as likely being a Raytheon triangle. The craft emitted an electromagnetic field that stopped his engine - a commonly reported phenomenon. At this moment, a PLF "gray" appeared at his window. He also saw Special Forces personnel in camouflage operating the device from the bushes.

To an observer familiar with science fiction or UFO conferences, the creature would appear alien. However, the man quickly realized the creature was about to incapacitate him. He acted decisively.

Opening his car door forcefully, he knocked the PLF down, and upon kicking it, he tore open what appeared to be its skin, revealing not flesh but a sophisticated robotic structure underneath, filled with fiber optics and gray circuits. This confirmed his suspicions that the creature was not extraterrestrial but a fabricated entity - a device - part of a deceptive operation.

When he shared this experience with Dr. Greer, it aligned with hundreds of similar accounts Dr. Greer had collected.

[\[document link\]](#)

According to Dr. Greer, such encounters have been engineered to perpetuate misinformation within the UFO community through books, movies, documentaries, and conferences, making it the dominant paradigm and belief system surrounding UFO phenomena.

These ongoing, highly sophisticated psychological operations that began in the 1950s, continue to this day. That is why Dr. Greer advocates the urgent need for law enforcement and special forces to stand down and dismantle these rogue, illegal projects that exploit civilians and innocent people through staged UFO events and abductions.

Jacques Vallée is a renowned scientist who extensively researched the UFO phenomenon during the 1980s and early 1990s. Vallée found himself entangled in a shadowy group that included figures like Dr. Hal Puthoff and Colonel John Alexander. It was during this period that Vallée obtained a document which he later discussed in his 1992 book, Forbidden Science 4.

[\[document link\]](#)

In the book, Vallée reveals that he secured evidence showing the CIA had simulated UFO abductions in Latin America - specifically in Brazil and Argentina - as part of psychological warfare experiments. This practice, according to the document dated from 1985, mirrors tactics outlined by CIA Director Bedell Smith in the early 1950s regarding the strategic value of UFO phenomena for psychological warfare.

[\[document link\]](#)

These covert operations, managed by clandestine groups under the Majority Joint Intelligence Committee (MAJIC), involve the deployment of man-made UFOs and entities, both biological and robotic, often accompanied by advanced weapon systems.

There are known cases in Africa and Latin America where covert operations have led to the destruction of villages and orchestrated abductions, fueling the belief in an extraterrestrial threat. A significant revelation from Werner von Braun, a key figure in rocket technology and a former Nazi scientist brought to the U.S. under Operation Paperclip, happened on his deathbed in 1974. Von Braun confided to Carol Rossin, the first female executive in the aerospace industry at Fairchild Industries, that plans were in place to fabricate an alien threat, and it would be a complete fabrication. A lie. This confession was made while von Braun was terminally ill with liver cancer, and he admitted his involvement in these operations - he had been read-in - and acknowledged their deceptive nature.

The ultimate goal behind staging a threat from space, as von Braun warned, is to manipulate public perception through fear. This manipulation aims to consolidate power under a global quasi-totalitarian regime, convincing the populace to sacrifice resources and freedoms - blood and treasure - to combat this fabricated alien threat.

Despite the deception being entirely false, it has successfully misled many, from senior congressional members to major media personalities and most within the UFO subculture. The effectiveness of this deception is bolstered by the vast financial resources available, with an estimated 20 to 22 trillion dollars funneled illegally into these covert projects since the mid-20th century.

Understanding the scale of this theft, which equates to nearly two-thirds of the United States' total, is crucial for comprehending the broader context of these briefing modules. This understanding also hinges on recognizing the psychological warfare strategies and technologies developed since the 1940s that facilitate deceptive operations.

In military parlance, a false flag operation is referred to as a "deceptive indication and warning" or "false indication and warning." Such operations are designed to mislead by setting up diversions that redirect public attention, a tactic detailed in the previous module called DDT - Decoy, Distract, and Trash.

These operations are expertly executed by highly trained counterintelligence operatives who have significant influence, especially within the media.

Dr. Greer had alerted key figures at the Pentagon about these plans decades ago; that at any moment, with the press of a button, they could fabricate an alien invasion using advanced aircraft, electronic warfare, weapon systems, and lifelike creatures that could easily deceive the public into believing they are encountering extraterrestrials. Dr. Greer's proactive communication has helped delay such events.

However, the existence of actual extraterrestrial beings makes it difficult for people to differentiate between the two - genuine ETs and manufactured ones. This manipulation technique is known as stagecraft.

The role of counterintelligence in maintaining the secrecy surrounding extraterrestrial phenomena is crucial. High-level officials, such as the chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee or a new president, might be misled by trusted operatives presenting evidence of horrific acts, such as mutilations and abductions, purportedly by aliens. These officials, not privy to the information Dr. Greer has validated through witnesses and documents, might believe these acts to be genuine threats from extraterrestrial species.

THE ULTIMATE GOAL OF THIS DECEPTION IS TO BOLSTER THE MILITARY-INDUSTRIAL COMPLEX, ECHOING THE CONCERNS PRESIDENT EISENHOWER RAISED DECADES AGO about its influence, thereby securing continued funding, power, and security clearances for these covert operations.

[\[video link\]](#)

The entirety of the United States government lacks a fundamental understanding of the issues at hand, to the extent that not a single senior official in significant positions within the Pentagon, White House, or Congress possesses even a basic grasp of the subject. This lack of understanding is problematic because it prevents these officials from distinguishing between real events and staged operations.

The technologies used to orchestrate such deceptions do exist and are managed through programs that operate without legitimate oversight from Congress or the President. As such, these programs are unconstitutional, rendering any national security clearances associated with them invalid, and as stated in the previous module: all clearances related to these projects should be vitiated.

A fundamental principle of constitutional and contract law is this: one cannot engage in illegal activities and then use the law to shield those actions. This principle is particularly relevant in cases where individuals involved in criminal enterprises attempt to invoke legally established U.S. laws or state protections under national security provisions or confidentiality clauses.

Recent actions by the United States Congress have been severely misguided. The major mistake lies in affording respect and security clearances to projects within secure communication information facilities (SCIFs) under Top Secret/Sensitive Compartmented Information (TS/SCI) clearances. These projects and personnel should instead be stripped of all clearances and declared criminal enterprises. Granting national security clearances to these operations is akin to providing organized crime syndicates with the same.

The need for transparency in government hearings is critical. Significant disclosures can and should occur in open settings, contrary to the claims that such discussions must be confined to a Secure Compartmented Information Facility (SCIF). The only details Dr. Greer would consider withholding are those directly related to the operational mechanisms of electro-gravitic technologies - specifically, how they function and their potential to revolutionize energy systems, which could significantly alleviate global poverty and shift the world towards peace rather than conflict in space.

Dr. Greer has clearly communicated this stance in meetings with members of both Congress and the Senate. He argues that the secrecy maintained by covert programs not only perpetuates global disparities in wealth but also fuels resentment, radicalism, and terrorism, all arising from these profound inequities. Revealing these hidden technologies would foster a world of abundance and prosperity for all.

The issues and aberrations we now face have been created by men, by human actions, and can similarly be resolved through collaborative efforts - by people, both men and women, coming together.

Congress has wrongly and repeatedly assumed that certain individuals involved in covert programs hold valid national security clearances that necessitate secrecy. It is the definition of insanity. It is unnecessary to conceal the existence of man-made electro-gravitic technologies, although their potential militarization, such as being adapted into missile delivery systems capable of rapid global reach, certainly poses a national security concern. An object could potentially travel from Tehran to Washington in mere seconds to deliver a payload, such as a dirty bomb.

While acknowledging these risks, maintaining excessive secrecy is not the solution. There needs to be a more transparent approach, considering the global instability and the urgent need for openness about these technologies that could transform the world.

Imagine a world that is abundant, peaceful, and free from extreme poverty and environmental destruction. Energy generation technologies, which could have revolutionized our approach to environmental conservation, should have been made public a century ago. However, the technologies enabling rapid global travel should not be disclosed until the world is safer, or until there are robust international measures to prevent their militarization.

There does exist an unfortunate reality where the most perilous criminal organizations possess these advanced technologies, while the legitimate government of the United States and other nations such as Sweden, Brazil, the United Kingdom, Canada, Germany, and Russia, are kept in the dark. This structure of secrecy is replicated globally, maintaining a barrier between these technologies and legal governmental oversight.

The majority intelligence committee, and its counterparts globally, operate as though the world has no geopolitical boundaries, with complete freedom and impunity across the globe - the Earth is their oyster. Consequently, they can function anywhere - China, Russia, Brazil, Africa, the Middle East - executing their operations exceptionally well. Even Special Forces personnel, who can operate globally without detection, do not compare to this program, which possesses technologies that enable them to remain invisible, including cloaking technologies.

This comprehensive view of the history and secrecy that shapes this situation also presents a solution to address these challenges: THIS SUBJECT NEEDS TO BE OPENLY ADDRESSED AND CORRECTED BY THE LEGAL GOVERNMENTS OF THE WORLD WITHIN A VERY SHORT TIME FRAME.

The issue of UFO secrecy has been concealed by clandestine operations for over 80 years, dating back to before 1944. The technologies from the initial crashes and studies have been fully operational since 1954, marking nearly 70 years of technological advancements that have escalated exponentially. This rapid progression underscores the critical point that while technology has advanced, the segments of the United States government, including the Pentagon and CIA that are not involved with these secret operations, remain outdated. Frozen in the 1940s.

As mentioned in the previous module, during one of Dr. Greer previous meetings at the Pentagon, Admiral Tom Wilson acknowledged that although the B2 Stealth bomber was the best asset available to him, there were far more advanced technologies capable of easily outmaneuvering it, leading him to declare it "game-set-match."

Aware of his civilian status and without any formal power or desire to enter government, Dr. Greer is a modern-day Paul Revere, sounding the alarm on these critical issues. The pressing need for leadership to address these matters appropriately, so far has been disappointingly slow and lacking in seriousness.

Congress and the White House have given secretive projects top-secret classifications and access to secure facilities, treating them as if they were legally sanctioned. This represents a fundamental error in how such projects are recognized and handled, pointing to a serious oversight in the government's response to advanced technologies.

Furthermore, these operations involve actions that amount to treason, including:

- the murder of innocent civilians
- unsanctioned abductions worldwide - a crime under any jurisdiction
- mutilations
- mass murders in villages outside the United States
- widespread deception
- the embezzlement of trillions of dollars over the years from U.S. coffers under false pretenses.

If the director of the FBI and the head of the criminal investigative division of the Pentagon cannot build a solid legal case from these facts, then perhaps they should reconsider their position in law enforcement.

These are verifiable facts supported by witnesses and documentation in this archive.

Allowing this situation to persist any longer will lead to dire consequences. The ultimate goal of the clandestine operations conducted by the Majority Joint Intelligence Committee (MAJIC) is to achieve psychological conditioning and advance technologies to the point where they can orchestrate a false attack on a global scale. This false flag operation could involve the destruction of a building or a jetliner, creating the illusion of an alien invasion on Earth.

Such an event would unite the world, not in peace, but in interplanetary war. This has been their agenda since the 1950s and why these psychological warfare programs are so essential. If our leaders and the public aren't convinced or deceived, they won't support these agendas.

The key is to instill the belief in war and these programs, through psychological manipulation and propaganda. Once this narrative is adopted by our leaders, the public, and the media, the agenda gains traction. And they have succeeded in doing just that. It's essentially a done deal. Unless someone can pull back the curtain and expose who exactly is behind these deceptive operations, we're stuck on a perilous path. An ancient Chinese proverb warns "Unless we alter our course, we'll end up where we're headed."

This is why it's a national security crisis.

In June of 2023, Dr. Greer emphasized that this crisis surpasses the dangers posed by China, Russia, Iran, or the Middle East. While geopolitical tensions with these nations could lead to catastrophic outcomes like thermonuclear war, this issue poses a greater threat to global interests, democracy, and the United States itself. Yet, it is not being treated with the seriousness it warrants.

Until Congress, the President, and the National Security Council grasp the full extent of what this intelligence briefing module outlines, they won't take the necessary actions because they lack a comprehensive understanding.

During briefings with former Vice President Pence, who is known for his fundamentalist Christian beliefs, it was suggested that extraterrestrials were agents of Satan, partaking in a final battle. This narrative, tailored to Pence's worldview, completely convinced him, demonstrating a critical aspect of counterintelligence: the importance of crafting messages that resonate with the psychological profile of the individual.

Perseverance is required to navigate challenges, to cite Winston Churchill's famous exhortation during the dire days of World War II, when Britain faced relentless bombings by the Nazis: "Never, never, never give up."

For Dr. Greer, his efforts represent a long-standing battle of 34 years - a war - with a potential catastrophic scenario where the entire planet could be at risk if certain technologies are misused.

Worst-case scenario: the complete displacement of Earth from its orbit, a feat that is technologically feasible. This scenario could be misconstrued as an alien invasion, further complicating the situation. This is why Dr. Greer stresses the importance of addressing these challenges proactively to prevent such extreme outcomes.

This module deals with the topic of deception and illegal programs, highlighting a particular focus on the operatives involved in such endeavors.

In 1953, a panel known as the Robertson Panel was convened by the CIA. The significance of this panel came to light after Dr. Greer briefed the director of the CIA in 1993, which subsequently led to the discovery of documents that detailed the operations of this panel.

[\[document link\]](#)

This historical panel shares similarities with a more recent proposal by Senator Chuck Schumer to establish an external panel to study related issues.

A major issue with such panels is their vulnerability to infiltration by operatives. These operatives, often appearing as credible scientists, are actually on the payroll of covert interests and are induced to support certain agendas.

For instance, Dr. Donald Menzel, a renowned astrophysicist from that era, was revealed to have been secretly on the CIA's payroll. His non-official cover (NOC) role was a professor at Harvard, where he maintained impressive academic credentials. However, his real task was to discredit and trivialize the subject of UFOs.

These operations extended to enlisting astronomers and amateur astronomers to deliberately hoax UFO sightings by throwing pie pans in the sky and photographing them. 71 years ago, this was part of a broader counterintelligence and disinformation campaign aimed at misleading the public, under the guise of conducting thorough investigations.

Moving forward a decade, the notorious Condon Committee comes into focus. Professor Edward Condon was a physics professor at the University of Colorado Boulder. During the 1960s, there was a need to wind down and close Project Blue Book, the Air Force project tasked with collecting an increasing amount of information on UFOs. Some individuals involved with the project, including its head, Dr. J. Allen Hynek, were beginning to acknowledge the reality of the phenomena they were studying.

To manage the closure of Project Blue Book, a panel, later referred to pejoratively as a "dog and pony show," was convened under the leadership of Professor Condon. This panel presented as a serious academic inquiry. However, documents later revealed that Professor Condon, who was portrayed as an objective scientist, was secretly on the payroll of the CIA, serving under non-official cover. This role was designed to deceive not only the media and senators but also the President of the United States.

This is confirmed by documents preserved in the archives, proving the extent of the deception. [\[document link\]](#)

The widespread issue of corruption affects various government and scientific organizations that are ostensibly tasked with conducting impartial studies. It is pervasive. Bodies like the external study groups associated with NASA and the AARO Office at the Pentagon are compromised. The probability that any of these entities will objectively evaluate the facts, evidence, and testimonies from whistleblowers within the system is currently almost non-existent.

This situation stems from the practice of using NOCs. Operatives involved with major intelligence committees and covert programs don't openly identify as undercover agents. Instead, they might hold seemingly innocuous positions, such as a professor of physics at Harvard, concealing their true affiliations.

The need for greater public awareness about how such infiltration and capture occur is paramount. This process of "capture" involves positioning individuals with significant credibility in roles where the media are directed to accept their authoritative stance.

Consequently, voices that could reveal the truth are sidelined or blacklisted in favor of those who propagate narratives aligned with the interests of these covert, illegal programs.

This manipulative strategy is evident not only in media presentations on platforms like 60 Minutes but also in how hearings and committee sessions are curated, ensuring that the public receives a controlled and biased perspective on key issues.

The corruption of fact-finding and scientific investigations began in the 1950s and persists today. In fact, it's hard to identify any panel, committee, or investigation - whether governmental or non-governmental - that has not been infiltrated and corrupted in over 70 years.

This is a significant problem due to the naivete of members of Congress and newcomers to the White House. Every four to eight years, a new president is elected, and with them come new staff and National Security Council advisors, all of whom lack the institutional knowledge Dr. Greer wishes to discuss.

These officials, referred to here as "executives," whether in the executive branch or senior congressional members, are incredibly busy. They spend much of their time on fundraising and re-election efforts. Even appointed officials find themselves too overwhelmed to delve deeply into the complexities and nuances of certain issues. Consequently, their lack of knowledge makes them easy targets for deception.

The inability of these officials to conduct thorough briefings and research themselves makes them susceptible to misinformation. This is the reason Dr. Greer is involved in providing intelligence briefings, which are condensed into short, five to ten-page summaries that officials can either accept or reject.

Dr. Greer holds no official position in the U.S. government, is not an undercover operative (NOC), and has never received any financial compensation from corporations or the government, despite having contributed millions of dollars in taxes.

The extensive and sophisticated infrastructure clandestinely built over 70 years exists within academia, government, the Department of Defense, the CIA, Pentagon offices, and key Senate and House offices, where undercover operatives routinely deceive their superiors.

Awareness of this issue began in 1993 when Dr. Greer was asked to brief the director of the CIA. During this time, his host, John Peterson, who had served on Ronald Reagan's National Security Council, informed Dr. Greer that the President and the CIA Director had been denied access and refused any information on this subject, despite specific and repeated inquiries.

Initially skeptical, Dr. Greer found it hard to believe such a scenario could be true, as it seemed implausible that such high-ranking officials would be denied access to information he had documented.

However, it was indeed the case. Peterson confirmed that it was common practice to mislead or outright lie to the President if necessary. This cynical admission was a stark introduction to the realities of Washington for Dr. Greer, who, as a medical doctor, had no prior involvement in government.

This, again, emphasizes the need for a clear understanding of how deeply this system of deception is embedded in governmental operations. Recognizing these realities is crucial for understanding how we have arrived at our current state and how we can move forward.

When dealing with such high levels of inducement and corruption, obtaining an honest assessment becomes challenging. It necessitates meticulous attention in the selection and vetting of individuals who will testify, serve on committees, or partake in investigations. The lives of these individuals must be thoroughly examined, yet there remains the likelihood that some corrupt elements will infiltrate the process.

To illustrate the depth of this issue, consider the discontinuation of Project Blue Book. As the project was shut down, the investigations transitioned into more secretive operations. Among the individuals initially considered for this committee was Dr. Robert Woods, a top-secret whistleblower now in his 90s. Dr. Woods was an aerospace engineer at McDonnell Douglas, which later merged with Boeing. He was involved in highly classified projects known as the Phantom Works within the McDonnell Douglas Research Programs.

Dr. Woods was closely associated with James McDonald, the founder of McDonnell Douglas, and was selected to be on the Condon Committee. He had conducted research at the request of McDonnell Douglas, and specifically Mr. McDonald, and possessed substantial files containing hard evidence on serious cases. Dr. Woods intended to present this evidence during the Condon Committee hearings, which could have significantly undermined the prevailing secrecy.

However, Professor Condon directly approached Mr. McDonald demanding that Dr. Woods be removed from the panel and dismissed from his position at McDonnell Douglas.

[\[document link\]](#)

Possessing real evidence often leads to being blacklisted, a situation that Dr. Greer has personally experienced for over 30 years. He expects to continue facing such ostracism until someone with sufficient knowledge recognizes the deception.

As a result, Dr. Woods was removed from the Condon Committee. The other members were selectively chosen to exclude those who could affirm the validity of the evidence presented. This practice of sanitizing committees to remove affirmative members has persisted into recent times, as evidenced by the actions of the recent AARO Office.

For any FBI personnel reading this brief: a report released by this office is a fraudulent criminal cover-up. The recently resigned director of the AARO Office, Dr. Sean Kirkpatrick, who was mandated by Congress to investigate UFO phenomena, should be arrested on federal fraud charges.

The progression from the Condon Report to the Gerald Ford congressional hearings, which was infiltrated by cover-up artists ultimately led to no substantive results. To avoid repeating past mistakes, it is vital for members of Congress, the American public, and the media to understand this history.

The Pentagon office, established by Congress to investigate UFO phenomena and gather evidence from witnesses and whistleblowers, was designed from the start to operate similarly to the Robertson Panel, the Condon Committee, and the Gerald Ford hearings. Its purpose was not just to collect information but to cover it up or distort it.

This can be proven. Through the Disclosure Project, Dr. Greer took the initiative to bring many top-secret witnesses to Washington at his own expense. These witnesses were provided with transportation, housing, protection, and other necessities. Dr. Greer personally escorted them and facilitated their initial debriefings with the chief investigator for the Senate Intelligence Committee and his counterpart from the Senate Armed Services Committee before they proceeded to the AARO Office and its SCIF.

Anticipating the office's approach to handling the information, Dr. Greer's involvement extended beyond mere facilitation; he participated to demonstrate his point conclusively.

And this point has been proven.

Individuals who had operational roles at Area 51 and Nellis Air Force Base, directly dealing with extraterrestrial matters, were brought in for questioning. During one session in the SCIF, Kirkpatrick became so upset by a top-secret witness's truthful testimony that he left the room, unwilling to listen further.

Another example involves Michael Herrera, the Marine who encountered an ARV craft. Contrary to Herrera's account of the craft being man-made and operated by rogue Special Forces in Indonesia, the official report misrepresented his testimony. The report falsely claimed that Herrera described the craft as extraterrestrial. In the archive is a screenshot of Dr. Greer's cell phone that contradicts the official report.

[\[image link\]](#)

These summaries in the report do not disclose the names of the individuals involved due to their classified status. However, Dr. Greer knows many of these individuals personally as he was responsible for bringing many of them in. Many of the synopses in the report are inaccurate, and this can be verified because he had debriefed these witnesses beforehand and has records of their actual accounts.

[\[document link\]](#)

This is high-level fraud. Congress mandated the Pentagon to conduct an objective investigation into UFO phenomena, however, the outcome, a report released in March of 2024, was a cover-up akin to the Condon Committee and the Robertson Panel. It is crucial to understand the workings of this system, specifically for members of Congress with whom Dr. Greer has met.

Those involved in the investigations are not genuinely seeking the truth but are instead paid operatives tasked with obscuring it. It also implicates the media in this deception, specifically Peter Bergen, the Senior National Security Analyst at CNN, who produced a cover-up article that dismissed the seriousness of these inquiries and portrayed Congress as gullible.

[\[article link\]](#)

This is the corruption of the Fourth Estate - the media's involvement with individual NOCs who appear to be regular journalists. Former CIA Director Bill Colby, who during the 1990s was involved in efforts to disclose zero-point technologies before his untimely death, had testified before a Senate committee, stating that the CIA had significant influence over key figures in the major media. It got him killed.

[\[document link\]](#)

Such influence corrupts the free press, particularly when it involves corporate and intelligence interests that wish to maintain secrecy. In contrast, a truly free press would be uninhibited in reporting on political scandals or budgetary matters.

A document from 1991, during the George H. W. Bush era, explicitly states that there were people embedded in media organizations worldwide to change, kill, or alter stories that were not favored by certain interests. This document underscores the influence exerted on the media.

This revelation indicates that both the public and members of Congress, as well as the White House, are under the illusion that the press remains uncorrupted and free. While media bias has always existed, the situation goes beyond mere bias; it involves direct corruption by a criminal enterprise that actively deceives the government and the public and engages in criminal activities ranging from murder to embezzlement.

Those involved in this corruption are often on the payroll, secured through substantial financial offers and threats. The late Carl Sagan is a perfect example, not to suggest his involvement in such activities, but to illustrate the type of influential positions in question. Two of Sagan's close associates, astronomers George Fennell, co-founder of the Extra Solar Planetary Society with Sagan, and James Mullaney, editor of Sky and Telescope Magazine, shared detailed information with Dr. Greer.

When Mullaney began providing information for Dr. Greer's research, he was warned that he would never work again if he ever attended a meeting to discuss this topic with Dr. Greer.

Before being deterred, Mullaney, along with Fennell, shared critical insights: Fennell, who was closely connected to Sagan and reportedly served as best man at Sagan's wedding, revealed a significant event in Sagan's career. According to Fennell, an impropriety was found in Sagan's PhD thesis, which might have involved plagiarism, an unattributed source, or falsified data.

This discovery was leveraged by the intelligence community, which presented Sagan with a stark ultimatum: cooperate with them or face a career-ending demotion to a janitorial position at Cornell. By cooperating, Sagan was promised wealth and fame, provided he publicized the narratives dictated by the intelligence community.

The importance of this account suggests that those involved, like Mullaney, Fennell, and others, could be deposed and put under oath to confirm these claims.

After Dr. Donald Menzel of Harvard passed away, there was a need to find someone with similar scientific prestige to continue downplaying the UFO issue, a role Sagan was compelled to fill through a combination of blackmail and bribery.

The coercive tactics employed by these powers within the intelligence community are a diabolical combination of incentives and threats - the "carrot and stick" approach. There is the allure of money and fame, the golden carrot, coupled with the threat of severe repercussions, a very big club.

These entities possess the capability to dismantle anyone's life by uncovering or fabricating compromising information. They have access to intimate details such as personal relationships, unpaid taxes, and other potentially damaging data.

For those who resist cooperation, the methods can become even more sinister, as illustrated by the case in the previous module of the witness whom Dr. Greer was assisting. This individual had child pornography planted on his computers and cell phones to prevent him from testifying to Congress about his experiences and knowledge.

These underhanded tactics are not isolated incidents but frequent occurrences in this field of work. Even individuals who are respected for their scientific credibility are not immune to being targets of both governmental and corporate corruption.

The challenges faced by Dr. Greer and his team are greatly compounded by corruption inside the scientific academic community.

Dr. Greer and his team examined an Atacama humanoid specimen but did not claim it was extraterrestrial due to uncertainty about its origins. Shortly after handing over the genetic material from this specimen to Professor Garry Nolan at Stanford University, Nolan received a substantial TEAL grant from the Pentagon. The grant, approximately three and a half million dollars, was allocated for what amounted to vaguely worded research.

[\[document link\]](#)

Prof. Nolan conducted the genetic tests deliberately and properly. However, when two of the world's leading geneticists reviewed the raw data, they described the results as academic fraud at the highest level.

Despite these concerns, major newspapers like The New York Times and The Washington Post reported that the specimen was simply a fetus that had been aborted.

[\[article link\]](#)

There are glaring discrepancies in this explanation. World experts in genetics, who examined the CAT scans and MRIs of the specimen, observed epiphyseal plates, indicative of bone growth. Such plates suggest that the specimen was equivalent to a six-year-old human child in terms of development, although it was only six to seven inches long. In fetuses, such bone structures are still cartilaginous and not yet developed.

[\[document link\]](#)

Moreover, other anatomical differences, such as an incorrect number of ribs and unique skull bones, indicate that the specimen was not human. Despite these findings, the narrative that the specimen was an aborted fetus has now been firmly established in the media.

This widespread dissemination of misleading information regarding the humanoid specimen Dr. Greer and his team examined, highlights that even reputable sources like a peer-reviewed journal at Cold Spring Harbor and major newspapers such as The Boston Globe and The New York Times reported the specimen as an aborted fetus, despite scientific evidence to the contrary.

During his interactions with Professor Nolan, who initially approached Dr. Greer with sincere intentions to assist, observed that Nolan's stance changed over time; a transformation he attributes to external pressures or inducements.

Dr. Greer himself has faced similar pressures; in 1992, he was offered $2 billion to align with certain interests, an offer he declined. Subsequently, he experienced personal threats and the loss of friends due to his decisions.

A common tactic used to sway professionals involves presenting them with compromising information alongside significant inducements, pushing them to conform to certain agendas. Most people would find it difficult to reject such lucrative offers and might accept a "golden parachute" to comply with the demands placed upon them.

Nearly all professionals, when faced with coercion or lucrative inducements, tend to comply with the demands placed upon them. In cases where they do not, these individuals often encounter suspicious and fatal 'accidents.' This pattern reflects the pervasive corruption within the system that spans academia, media, government, and corporate sectors.

Moreover, the general public, along with many members of Congress, lack awareness of how counterintelligence operations function, often accepting information at face value. There is a prevalent belief in Congress and among the public that society remains free and that the press is independent, especially concerning matters that powerful global interests wish to keep secret.

The media plays a critical role in perpetuating this cover-up. If the media had remained uncorrupted and just two investigative reporters had researched this issue thoroughly, the extensive cover-up would have been exposed as early as the 1950s.

In the 1990s, Dr. Greer was hosted at a salon in New York City, an event attended by affluent and influential individuals, including the wife of the secretary-general of the United Nations, Boutros Boutros-Ghali, Laurence Rockefeller and other prominent members of the New York elite; the "New York 100." During such events, which he has attended worldwide, Dr. Greer provided briefings to people who hold significant influence in society.

Among the attendees at this particular event was a man named Robert Schwartz. At the time, Schwartz, who was in his 70s and a close friend of Mike Wallace from 60 Minutes, served on the board of Time Life, which later became part of AOL Time Warner. During a conversation with Dr. Greer, Schwartz made a stark comment about the state of journalism, stating, "The Fourth Estate is dead and we're all scribes taking dictation from the right hand of the king," referencing the influence of the covert groups.

Schwartz then shared a pivotal incident involving Mike Wallace, and his respected investigative news magazine 60 Minutes on CBS. Wallace had come into possession of some MJ-12 documents and was preparing to dramatically pull back the curtain and unveil hidden truths about the UFO topic.

At the time, CBS was owned by Westinghouse, one of the defense contractors involved in covert programs. From the highest levels of the organization, Wallace was instructed not to pursue the story, marking the first time he had ever been restricted from covering a story he believed to be significant.

This directive deeply affected Wallace, leading him into a profound depression. He began to question his entire career and life's purpose. Wallace discussed his depression and suicidal thoughts on Larry King Live shortly after Dr. Greer's own appearance on the show. Wallace openly shared his struggles with his mental health, highlighting the personal impact of the professional constraints imposed on him.

Wallace expressed a profound realization about his career, stating that he felt like a fraud. While he didn't explicitly mention it during the interview, according to Schwartz, it was the overt threat and instruction not to pursue the story that led him to question his integrity and role as a journalist, as he was unable to cover what he considered the biggest story in U.S. history.

This has happened with other media professionals. Ira Rosen, a former colleague of Wallace at 60 Minutes who later worked for ABC News on 20/20 and Prime Time Live news magazines, visited Dr. Greer's home after the National Press Club event in 2001.

Dr. Greer provided Rosen with 35 hours of digital testimony from top secret sources and hundreds of pages of classified documents. Rosen acknowledged that if the information were true, it would be the biggest story in the history of journalism. Due to Rosen's position as executive director, he believed that he had significant editorial freedom.

Rosen planned to organize a town hall meeting featuring top secret whistleblowers and to create a series of exposés, just like Wallace wanted to do years earlier.

Upon returning to New York, Rosen was explicitly instructed by ABC headquarters not to proceed with the story. Later, Dr. Greer received a call from Rosen, confirming that he was indeed prevented from pursuing the story. Rosen cryptically referred to the decision-makers as those associated with the Majority Joint Intelligence Committee and influential corporate figures.

This interference explains why there was no significant media coverage of either the 2001 or the 2023 National Press Club events. The media, regardless of political orientation, is thoroughly infiltrated and corrupt. If there were an honest and courageous media outlet willing to thoroughly investigate these issues, they could potentially expose decades of cover-ups, going back as far as the 1950s.

Despite this, Dr. Greer holds onto a sliver of hope that someone within the media might eventually come forward to challenge the status quo but advises against relying on these corrupt media interests for the future well-being of planet Earth.

The entertainment industry is also heavily infiltrated by operatives from corporate and intelligence backgrounds.

Arnold Kopelson, a renowned producer/director associated with 20th Century Fox during the 1990s, was given a significant budget of $60 million to produce any movie he desired. In 1996 or 1997, he expressed his intent to Dr. Greer to create a film based on true events related to the topics he was involved with. Dr. Greer was willing to cooperate, but he expressed doubts about whether 20th Century Fox would allow such a movie to be made without altering the truth into fiction.

Despite these concerns, Kopelson was optimistic about his control over the project, claiming he had complete autonomy to use the funds as he saw fit. He was eager to gather more information for the film, Dr. Greer was organizing an April 1997 congressional briefing with a private group of top-secret individuals. Considering Kopelson's high profile, Dr. Greer suggested that his executive assistant, a very astute woman, attend instead. She would be able to blend in with the crowd more effectively.

She attended the briefing and later shared her notes with Dr. Greer, providing insights into the discussions that had taken place nearly three decades ago.

Dr. Greer was enthusiastic about the potential of creating a major motion picture that would be seen by millions, based on the stories and events he had been involved with, marking it as "based on a true story." He has discussed similar projects with some of the top Hollywood producers and directors, including Ridley Scott, who were all eventually shut down in their attempts to develop such films.

After Kopelson's assistant returned from the briefing and showed significant interest in moving forward with the project, Dr. Greer offered Kopelson full access to his resources. Dr. Greer mentioned that he had invested about $15 million into collecting the information, a significant effort over the years for him and his group but emphasized that he was not concerned about financial gain; his primary goal was to get the story out.

When Kopelson called back, his response was dishearteningly familiar. Echoing what Ira Rosen had expressed years later. Surprised, Dr. Greer reminded him of his earlier confidence that he could produce any film he desired. Kopelson's reply was succinct: "Not this one."

That marked the end of their conversation and the project. Again.

There are widespread misconceptions perpetuated by conspiracy theorists who, through searches and speculation, often distort the truth. Dr. Greer's firsthand experiences and the evidence contained within correspondence files in this archive illustrate the real workings of global systems.

We live in a world where media corruption is prevalent and governmental offices can be compromised through bribery, threats, or even violence. The situation is challenging but not hopeless. There need to be clean, courageous, and honest individuals within the media or government with the power to subpoena, administer oaths, and expose the information that has been concealed.

Over the past 30 years, Dr. Greer has engaged with influential figures in Congress, the White House, and other global leaders, including ministers of defense from Great Britain, Canada, and Australia - four of the Five Eyes intelligence alliance, with only New Zealand remaining unengaged at the ministerial level. The problems of secrecy, counterintelligence, infiltration, and corruption are not confined to the United States but mirrored globally.

This global architecture of secrecy affects even countries like Great Britain and Japan, where Dr. Greer has interacted with high-level officials, including a Japanese minister responsible for science and technology, who expressed interest in disclosing the information Dr. Greer has compiled. This widespread pattern underscores the challenges of bringing such secretive information to light, despite interest from various international leaders.

Dr. Greer recounts his extensive efforts to engage with influential figures worldwide over the past 30 years, aiming to move forward with his disclosure projects. He shares an example from Japan, a country known for its technological advancements, where a high-ranking official expressed initial enthusiasm for the project. However, this official later communicated to Dr. Greer that he had been effectively shut down and could not proceed.

This pattern of initial openness followed by abrupt shutdowns is common, highlighting the crucial need for integrity, honesty, and, most importantly, courage. While many individuals possess integrity and honesty, lacking the courage to confront and withstand opposition from powerful interests renders these qualities ineffective.

Despite starting with good intentions and a genuine desire to make a positive impact, many of the men and women Dr. Greer has worked with have been unable to maintain their course when faced with significant adversity. The challenges are daunting, and the situation is even more dire than it may appear.

Dr. Greer and members of his team have faced significant challenges and dangers in their work, including severe measures, like waterboarding.

Tragically, people on Dr. Greer's team have been killed, including the former CIA Director Bill Colby, who had intended to defect from his group and collaborate with Dr. Greer by handing over a zero-point device in 1995. Before he could meet with a member of Dr. Greer's board, Colby was found deceased, floating down a river south of Washington, D.C., marking a very painful and tragic episode.

On a more hopeful note, there are now law enforcement personnel willing to provide protection for individuals wanting to come forward with sensitive information. Although these individuals are highly skilled, having backgrounds in Special Forces and trained beyond the capabilities of a SWAT team, there is need for caution. They need to be fully briefed on the adversaries they might face, as Dr. Greer has for a new law enforcement team currently being assembled.

Dr. Greer is still deliberating on how to handle some of the more highly confidential files. The identity of a former chairman of a major corporation, who reached out for help, will only be disclosed to investigators and Special Forces personnel whom Dr. Greer trusts to provide protection. Shortly after contacting Dr. Greer, this individual was threatened by an operative who warned that his entire family could be targeted.

The former chairman was concerned about two major issues:

Firstly, there was the potential confiscation of his substantial assets, accumulated through his involvement with the corporation, which he believes were largely ill-gotten gains linked to the undisclosed technologies he was involved with.

Secondly, he possessed schematics and documents that proved the corporation's possession of so-called "free energy devices." He expressed that these could have provided free energy for everyone on Earth for decades.

As he ages and contemplates his mortality, the former chairman is troubled by his past actions, which he feels have contributed to widespread death and poverty. He is now facing a moral reckoning, questioning whether he wants to leave this world burdened by such a legacy.

On the broader issue of moral and ethical behavior among corporate leaders and politicians, many who hold these positions tend to exhibit sociopathic traits, prioritizing their interests above all else. This self-centeredness is prevalent among senior corporate figures and politicians, who often strive to advance their positions at the expense of others.

These traits are evident in about 4.5% of the U.S. population, which equates to roughly 18 million people. High-functioning individuals among this group often ascend to high-ranking positions within corporations and governments.

When this former chairman was threatened, Dr. Greer sought help from his contacts within the Senate Intelligence Committee, expressing frustration over the lack of adequate security measures to protect such individuals and their families from criminal elements within the government and corporations. Despite their good intentions, they are unable to safeguard those who are willing to come forward with crucial information, leaving them vulnerable to threats akin to those from a mafia hit team.

This dynamic must be reversed. The real perpetrators should be the ones living in fear, not those who are trying to disclose important truths. Dr. Greer has advocated for executive protection measures, which were recently confirmed to have been implemented, providing much-needed security for high-value individuals willing to expose sensitive information.

It is vital that whistleblowers and similar individuals be protected by law enforcement and federal marshals, when necessary. Those providing security should include operatives from elite units like the Green Berets or Navy SEALs, who possess capabilities far beyond standard police forces or typical FBI agents. Such protection measures have now been offered and confirmed.

Despite recognizing the importance of security for others, Dr. Greer does not anticipate receiving such protection himself due to his lack of official status in any corporation or government. He describes himself as "the dispensable man" or "the throwaway," underscoring his own vulnerability due to his outsider status.

In early 1994, during a significant meeting that took place after his discussion in 1993 with the director of the CIA, Kevin Foley visited Dr. Greer's home in North Carolina. During a family dinner, Foley conveyed that President Clinton and his team supported Dr. Greer's request for a full investigation and control over secretive activities.

Foley also relayed a dire warning: the president had been advised that he could not be protected from the group responsible for maintaining these secrets. They can't "afford to lose another president like we did with Jack Kennedy."

This conversation significantly shifted Dr. Greer's perspective on the power and influence of the secretive group he was challenging.

After ensuring his family were in bed, Dr. Greer learned from Foley about the significant risks associated with challenging a group more powerful than the White House and the US government; forces embedded within the White House, Secret Service, military, and CIA, whose members operate under non-official covers. Foley then suggested that Dr. Greer, then 38 with four children, should take on the challenge himself.

Dr. Greer was taken aback, especially given his limited resources and the enormity of the task. Why would the President, who had sworn an oath to uphold and defend the Constitution against all enemies, both foreign and domestic shy away from these risks associated with his official duties?

Despite the risks, Foley continued, someone needed to take action, echoing a sentiment previously expressed by Laurence Rockefeller in September 1993. Dr. Greer was dispensable - that if something were to happen to him, it would be less consequential than putting the president at risk. This blunt admission served as stark introduction to the political realities of Washington for Dr. Greer: while others might avoid risks, he was expected to face the potential consequences alone.

This type of dynamic has recurred throughout Dr. Greer's experiences and meetings.

[\[document link\]](#)

For those in positions of power, such as committee chairs and members of intelligence and armed services committees, real change requires extraordinary courage. Leaders like Senators Mark Rubio and Mark Warner along with Representatives Tim Burchett, Anna Paulina Luna, and others, must recognize the importance of resilience. They must be prepared to stay the course, undeterred by threats or inducements, if they truly wish to uncover and address these deep-seated issues.

It's a significant challenge to expect politicians and other individuals to confront deeply ingrained corruption and counterintelligence operations that have infiltrated major institutions.

The understanding of this difficulty resonates well with law enforcement, Special Forces, and Navy SEALs - groups known for their willingness to face such challenges.

The ability to identify leaders or mainstream media outlets of such courage, that are prepared to address and expose these issues, is difficult due to pervasive corruption.

An attorney from the legal team of the Disclosure Project, also serves as one of the King's Counselors for King Charles of the United Kingdom. There are plans to arrange a meeting in Europe to address similar issues of secrecy and threats that are also prevalent there. Dr. Greer has had extensive experience meeting with defense officials in the UK and other European countries.

A head of state from a major European country who began to investigate these secretive operations was directly threatened with assassination if he proceeded further. Individuals like this should make themselves available to discuss these critical issues.

The manipulation and threats seen in the U.S. occur on an international scale and are part of the global pattern, as evidenced by Dr. Greer's interactions with figures like Lord Hill-Norton. The archive provides a comprehensive understanding of the scale and depth of these issues.

[\[documents link\]](#)

Lord Hill-Norton, a five-star admiral often referred to as a "Sea Lord", extended an invitation to Dr. Greer to visit his cottage in Hampshire. This visit occurred in the mid-90s, around the time of the assassination of CIA Director Bill Colby.

At the time, Lord Hill-Norton had previously served as the Minister of Defense for Great Britain and was also the head of the military committee for NATO and the Ministry of Defense (MOD). This position in the MOD historically included oversight of both MI6 and MI5, providing him with a comprehensive role; similar to combining the U.S. Secretary of Defense and Director of the CIA.

Lord Hill Norton had retired and was serving in the House of Lords. He had become aware of UFO issues through Timothy Good, author of "The Top Secret," and the stories of Lord Mountbatten.

Mountbatten, a member of the Royal Household, had experienced a UFO landing on his estate, which left a significant imprint in the snow, and was witnessed by his staff. This event piqued Lord Mountbatten's interest in UFOs, prompting him to investigate further and engage with individuals such as Dorothy Kilgallen, a journalist with knowledge about Roswell.

Despite his high status and connections, Lord Mountbatten did not make significant headway in his investigations. However, his efforts and those of others in the elite circles of the House of Lords, including Lord Hill-Norton, marked the beginning of a deeper inquiry into these mysterious occurrences.

Lord Hill Norton expressed his frustration at having been kept in the dark about UFO-related projects during his tenure. When informed that there were clandestine and illegal projects in the United Kingdom analogous to those in the United States, involving people Dr. Greer personally knew, Lord Hill Norton was notably upset; furious about being excluded from such critical information.

Dr. Greer was asked to bring over a presidential briefing document initially prepared for President Bill Clinton, as well as documents assembled for the Director of Central Intelligence to Lord Hill Norton's home for the meeting. During this time, Lord Hill-Norton candidly expressed his confusion about why such crucial information had been withheld from him.

In response to Lord Hill-Norton's frustration, Dr. Greer posed a hypothetical scenario to him: What if he had discovered a clandestine, unsanctioned group committing various criminal acts, including murder, kidnapping, and embezzlement, and this group possessed technologies that could eliminate dependence on oil and fossil fuels, restore the biosphere, and eradicate global poverty within 20 years?

Lord Hill-Norton then stood up and exclaimed that he would not have tolerated such activities for a moment. Dr. Greer explained to him that his reaction confirmed why he had not been informed.

As a doctor, Dr. Greer likens the secretive group's method to a "soul biopsy," where they assess an individual's psychological beliefs, integrity, courage, knowledge, and spiritual perspective. If they determine someone is amenable to illegal operations, they gradually disclose more information.

If they recognize an individual as principled and upright, they withhold information, fearing exposure. In Lord Hill-Norton's case, his integrity and honor made him a threat to their secrecy, prompting them to exclude him from sensitive information.

This pattern of selective disclosure is not unique to the MOD but is observed across various levels of government and military. Some directors of the MOD, secretaries of defense, CIA directors, senators, representatives, and even presidents have been privy to these secrets, while others have not.

The decision to inform or withhold information is strategically calculated based on an individual's likelihood to align with or challenge the objectives of a clandestine group. This group conducts an analysis to determine if a person can be manipulated and if they will comply with blatantly illegal activities, essentially assessing whether the individual exhibits sociopathic tendencies.

Those who do not show a willingness to partake in such corruption are excluded from sensitive information to the extent that they are not even informed of basic operational details, such as the locations of facilities.

Conversely, if the group senses that an individual will align with their agenda, they gradually disclose more information, monitoring the person's psychological responses, communications, and even personal discussions with close family members like a spouse. If an individual remains compliant and does not deviate from the group's directives, they are progressively brought deeper into the fold.

However, if someone is assessed as likely to challenge the group or become a whistleblower - regardless of their high-ranking position such as president, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, CIA director, Minister of Defense, or chairman of an intelligence committee - they are either kept in the dark or misled with disinformation.

This manipulation has impacted many members of Congress and several U.S. presidents, including President Trump and Vice President Pence. The head of a prominent lobbying and fundraising firm confirms that both were misled with false information. She grew up close to the Pence family and revealed in mid-2020 that the president and vice president had been fed misleading information, leading to potentially tragic decisions.

Despite her professional prominence, she expressed these concerns based on her longstanding personal connections rather than her official capacity.

Misleading intelligence from trusted sources deceived both President Trump and Vice President Pence, specifically, Vice President Pence, a fundamentalist Christian and head of the Space Council. He was influenced by presentations that depicted alien activities as satanic works related to apocalyptic prophecies, which he believed.

Since the 1950s, it has been customary for the vice president to serve as chairman of the Space Council, and thus, Pence was appointed to this position by President Trump and given significant responsibilities regarding UFO investigations.

The "soul biopsy" influence on both President Trump and Vice President Pence was strategically crafted based on their belief systems, enabling manipulators to steer the formation of the Space Force according to their agenda. This approach was similarly employed with President Reagan during the 1980s to promote the Strategic Defense Initiative, also known as "Star Wars," which aimed to develop space-based weapons systems.

A colonel, who recently passed and had been involved in military efforts to secure funding for this initiative, revealed that while Reagan was receptive to these ideas, President Carter had been approached with similar propositions but did not endorse them.

[\[document link\]](#)

Regardless of political views, President Jimmy Carter was exceptionally intelligent, having been a top nuclear engineer in his class at Annapolis. President Carter, who had a personal encounter with an unidentified flying object near Fort Benning while serving as Governor of Georgia, documented this experience in a report that is preserved in the archive, signed by him.

[\[document link\]](#)

The strategic manipulation of information also played a significant role during President Reagan's administration. Early in his term, Reagan was presented with a scenario akin to the movie Independence Day which portrayed extraterrestrial activity as a hostile threat. This narrative appealed to patriotic sentiments and convinced Reagan of the threat, leading him to authorize substantial funding for black projects focused on defense against these perceived extraterrestrial threats.

A colonel involved in military strategies at the time confirmed that this manipulation was intentional. He revealed that leveraging the alien threat was a decisive tactic used to secure the necessary funding for these initiatives, aligning with the warnings of Werner von Braun.

The importance of recognizing these manipulation tactics is critical to understanding the broader implications of such deceptive strategies in governance and defense policy.

There needs to be a higher standard of scrutiny when evaluating individuals assigned by the system to brief high-ranking officials like the President, the Senate Intelligence Chairman, or a Minister of Defense. This caution is necessary because the information provided often comes from clandestine, illegitimate programs. Those assigned to deliver such briefings are typically well-versed in counterintelligence and psychological manipulation tactics.

Given their backgrounds, high-ranking officials such as the President or Vice President, often without significant prior governmental experience at the national level, are particularly susceptible to misinformation.

For instance, Vice President Pence was previously the Governor of Indiana, President Trump was a real estate investor and developer, and President Carter was a peanut farmer and Governor of Georgia. None had the requisite experience to navigate the complex and deceptive environment they faced upon entering high office, a viper's nest of disinformation and manipulation.

In the absence of a reliable and honest source of information, such as what the Disclosure Project aims to provide, these leaders find it challenging to discern the truth. Without access to independent and trustworthy information, these officials cannot effectively understand and address the issues presented to them.

One such recent incident involved a Congresswoman encountering a clandestine FBI agent who cautioned her against taking any information from Dr. Greer seriously. This is a recurring challenge Dr. Greer faces; each time he provides insights, someone appears afterwards to undermine his efforts with misleading or diversionary tactics.

Having witnessed this pattern again and again for over 30 years, Dr. Greer is not optimistic about rapid changes, but emphasizes the urgency of addressing these issues.

Thus, the decision was made to make the entire archive of information available to the public, providing a resource for any honest, incorruptible, and courageous staffer or member of Congress to act upon. There is much work to be done on the archive in the way of refining the labeling and organization, but it was felt it was important to make it available to the public even in its current form.

The contents of this archive surpass what could be disclosed in a year's worth of daily committee hearings. It includes testimonies from hundreds of whistleblowers and thousands of documents.

Despite the vastness of this disclosure, it is doubtful that mainstream media outlets like 60 Minutes or CNN will cover the information. As a non-governmental entity without professional staff or private investigators, and limited by a lack of funds, it is entirely possible for false information to slip through. Dr. Greer is open to correcting any inaccuracies found within the archive, stressing that while efforts are made in good faith to vet information, deception by skilled individuals could potentially mislead them.

Ultimately, the responsibility for discerning the truth in these complex matters extends beyond just one person or organization.

In the broader context of disclosure and accountability: Dr. Greer is neither a judge, prosecutor, FBI agent, member of the House Oversight Committee, nor part of the National Security Council. It is the responsibility of these entities to subpoena individuals, verify the truthfulness of their testimonies or documents, and prosecute those found to be lying or submitting fraudulent information. While these officials have the investigatory and legal enforcement powers necessary to take such actions, Dr. Greer does not.

For 80 years, there has been a consistent failure in Washington to adequately address and investigate these issues. As the Director of the Global Disclosure Movement, it is not Dr. Greer's personal responsibility to oversee such investigations.

It is the duty of the public and the responsible authorities to thoroughly investigate these matters.

The Government Accounting Office (GAO), along with some contractors, had planned to assign at least 30 people to meticulously review all the content and organize the archive, but a proper investigation has yet to be conducted.

Plans had been made by Senate Intelligence and Armed Services committees, but they were ultimately undermined and terminated. Similarly, a provision that would have granted amnesty to corporations for six months before potential prosecution, was also removed. There appears no alternative but to release the information publicly, ensuring sensitive personal details are redacted to protect individuals' privacy.

The participation of additional people with credible information, documents, or research to contribute to the disclosure effort is essential. The archive is a dynamic and evolving resource, a living entity, open to updates and corrections. The possibility of inaccuracies exists. Most of the content is reliable, however some errors may exist due to the lack of resources to fully guarantee the accuracy of all information.

Anyone with relevant documents, information, or contacts with whistleblowers should reach out to Dr. Greer and his team, so these can be included in the archive and help it grow to be more comprehensive and accurate.

There must be transparency and accountability, especially for those within corporate, intelligence, or military sectors who possess sensitive information.

INDIVIDUALS ARE NOW AUTHORIZED TO DISCLOSE INFORMATION WITHOUT FACING LEGAL PENALTIES. The projects they may expose have been deemed illegal. Any supposedly classified information related to these illegal projects can be brought forward, as these classifications are considered invalid due to the unlawful nature of the projects themselves.

ANY POTENTIAL WHISTLEBLOWERS NOW HAVE PROTECTION. This protection removes any previous barriers to coming forward with information, whether it involves material evidence (bodies, metals, etc.), documents, or methods related to these undisclosed criminal enterprises which legally LACK ANY LEGITIMATE NATIONAL SECURITY CLAIMS.

THIS IS A CALL TO ACTION, aimed at those who have been hesitant, by providing them the security assurances needed to disclose information that could be crucial in addressing and correcting clandestine and unauthorized activities.

In 1997, Dr. Greer made disclosures that, after 27 years, have not been refuted by any U.S. government officials; no one has approached him to contest his claims, supporting his assertion that his information is correct.

This opens up the concept of the inverse witness. Unlike a direct witness, who possesses firsthand information from being involved in specific programs, seeing, or handling something directly, an inverse witness is someone who, by all accounts, should have been informed about these operations but was not. This category would include:

- Multiple U.S. presidents - beginning with Clinton
- CIA Director Woolsey
- Members of the Senate Intelligence Committee
- Members House Oversight Committee, including former chairpersons
- Secretaries of defense
- Heads of intelligence
- Joint Chiefs of Staff

Dr. Greer has spent considerable time briefing these high-level officials, including the director of the Defense Intelligence Agency at the Pentagon, to inform them of operations they were surprisingly unaware of.

General Patrick Hughes a three-star general and a top figure in U.S. military intelligence, was directly denied access to certain programs. These individuals substantiate claims that certain programs are unconstitutional and illegal. No project can be considered lawful if it involves deceiving those who constitutionally need to know, from the president downward.

This is a crucial point that, if understood by Congress and the media, could lead to significant revelations. It would mean that individuals could potentially bring forward documents or even material evidence from these secretive programs, providing it to entities like the Disclosure Project.

There exists a plan involving law enforcement and Special Forces, as well as a breakaway group from covert programs at a senior level, to deliver evidence to the Disclosure Project. This evidence will be added to the archive, which could face immediate threats of removal from platforms like the Amazon cloud due to its sensitive nature.

The urgency of having robust backup capabilities for the archive due to its sensitive and potentially groundbreaking content is paramount. The archive includes not only documents but also retrieval videos and other substantial evidence, such as materials related to covert operations within the patent office, where patents dealing with free energy and zero-point energy have been seized.

The incorporation of this information into the archive represents a major challenge, not only in terms of the volume of data but also in ensuring its security, referred to as operational security or "op sec." Enhancing the security around this archive is critical and will require significant effort.

Dr. Greer has received encrypted messages from individuals both inside secretive government programs and those tasked with law enforcement duties on these illegal projects. These contacts have indicated that every black site and corporation involved would turn over material to his team. This material will be offered first to the President, Congress, and other relevant authorities at a secure location for their review, ensuring they also receive copies.

As the senior advisor to these teams, Dr. Greer also provides guidance on what to expect, including details about the technologies they will encounter and the security systems at these facilities. He has been informed by insiders about the dangers involved, describing the mission as potentially suicidal, particularly for the number of Special Forces managers who have transitioned from the military to work on this project.

Dr. Greer has been proactive in communicating with members of Congress, warning them in the past six months that if they do not take action, they will lose control of the situation, leading to a disorderly and potentially dangerous disclosure. He has cautioned that such an outcome would force Congress to conduct reactive investigations, typical of Washington's approach, which often involves playing catch-up after events have unfolded.

During the Clinton era, a member of the National Security Council remarked that long-term planning on the council spanned only about six months, indicating a predominantly reactive approach. This tendency to react rather than proactively address issues presents a significant problem, especially given the global scale of crises that demand attention. Such a busy agenda can allow critical issues to slip unnoticed.

The old Southern saying, "Look busy, Jesus is coming," illustrates perfectly how constant busyness can prevent serious engagement with pressing matters. This mindset keeps those in power preoccupied with immediate problems, leaving no room to delve into issues like those Dr. Greer raises, which are often dismissed as conspiracy theories or nonsensical claims by eccentrics.

This disregard is not accidental but a deliberate tactic to keep such topics marginalized. There is a document from the 1950s, currently in the archive, that implicates Disney Studios. It outlines a plan for Disney Studios to create cartoons and movies that would ridicule the UFO phenomenon, making it a subject of mirth. This tactic of using media for derision is a classic psychological operation (Psyop), a strategic approach also employed by Hollywood and other media outlets to manipulate public perception.

To further illustrate this strategy, the founder of the National Enquirer, a CIA operative and an MIT graduate skilled in psychological warfare, utilized mafia funds to start the National Enquirer. This publication became known for sensationalizing UFO reports, transforming them into ludicrous stories, such as aliens engaging in bizarre activities. This method of ridicule serves as a potent tool in discrediting serious UFO incidents, effectively making them laughing stocks.

Such practices trace back to the 1950s with Disney and extend to contemporary examples like the coverage of the Peruvian mummy case. This case was strategically reported in tabloids to undermine its credibility, demonstrating how counterintelligence tactics are persistently used to manipulate public understanding of UFO-related information.

The reason considerable time has been devoted to discussing these various manipulation techniques is simple: understanding them is crucial to avoid being deceived.

The importance of recognizing these patterns is pre-requisite to conduct one's intelligence analysis and assess the truthfulness of statements. Members of Congress, investigators, the FBI, and others must first grasp how the system works and identify the agendas embedded within it, then differentiate between fact and fiction.

A primary tactic used by operatives is to frame extraterrestrial activities as a national security threat, a narrative that has been consistently propagated since the 1940s and 1950s. This perspective was notably emphasized by Wernher von Braun, a key figure in rocket development for Adolf Hitler, who on his deathbed warned of the misuse of the alien threat narrative.

This strategy aims to convince the public of the narrative's validity for two main reasons: firstly, to justify keeping such information secret due to its perceived dire nature, and secondly, to garner support for the covert management of these issues by military, intelligence, and corporate entities.

The implications of human activities on potential extraterrestrial civilizations, if these civilizations were hostile, would likely have been evident soon after humans detonated the first atomic bomb. The detonation's electromagnetic pulse (EMP), with its scalar component, could have disrupted their communication and transportation systems.
