>Tony.....I invite you and your readers to read "The Talk of the Galaxy" by >Dr. [REDACTED] a year 2000 publication, which may put a whole new >light on the "populated universe" concept.
>Dr. LaViolette has been studying pulsars for these past 21 years and has >concluded that they are indeed navigational beacons, or even possibly >interstellar communications signals. His arguments are strong, based upon >the fact that the beacons are intelligently located throughout the universe, >not randomly scattered here and there. His book is of particular interest to >cerealogists in that he includes the details of the 1978 patenting by >R [REDACTED] of a directable "force beam". Crop Circle researchers have >not known till now what force may be available to formation designers to >lay down standing grain plants. [REDACTED] has filled in that blank.
>Since 1968, the pulsars have been accepted by many astronomers as the >remaining cores of exploded stars, beaming radiation of one type or another >at us as they rapidly rotate. Not so, per Dr. LaViolette, who has measured >these precise signals and recognized that they are not "natural". Evidently >many astrophysicists agree with LaViolette, though they are reluctant to >openly agree for the same reasons we see throughout the scientific >community: no one wants to stick his neck out!! [REDACTED] is a >courageous gent and deserves attention. Enjoy the read!! [REDACTED]
