

NASA Airbrushes Out UFOs from Satellite Photos

Donna Tietze witnessed first-hand how NASA keeps UFOs out of public view. As a former photo technician for NASA at the Johnson Space Center in Houston, Texas, Donna worked as a sub-contractor at NASA for 15 years. She is the recipient of numerous space awards including the 1969 Apollo Achievement Award from the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, a 1973 Skylab Award for success on the Skylab program, Recognition and Service Award for support of for background checks. The secret clearance that I had gotten was if I had worked on any type of secret work, like work for the Air Force... I was aware that there were restricted areas at NASA... because some of the areas were called "Mission Critical Areas" that when a mission was going on if you went into a certain room and tampered with computers you could really get the whole space program to abort a mission. I mean there were very sensitive areas all around during missions. So with the secret clearance was flying fast... The edges were very crisp and white and I thought this was a spot on the emulsion. Sometimes chemicals don't develop all of the areas and you do get spots that are white on it. He said, What do you think that is? And I said Is it a spot on the emulsion? And he said, No, spots on the emulsion don't leave round shadows on the ground. So as I looked underneath it I could see this round shadow under it in the same shape that it was and in the same angle as the shadows off the the 1975 Apollo Suez Test Project, and numerous other awards for her skills as a technical artist. Donna Tietze spent most of her professional life in the space programs as a technical illustrator drawing lunar maps, landing sights, flight manuals for astronauts, working in the precision slide lab, and creating visual parameters of missions. Donna is now an educator working on her Masters in Education.

We first learned about Donna Tietze from Don Ratsch of Operation Right to Know, and after reading a transcript of a May 6, 1995 interview with her on WOL-AM in Washington, DC on "UFOs Saturday Night" hosted by Elaine Douglass of Operation Right to Know, Zoh invited her onto The Zoh Show. Donna described witnessing an incident in a photo lab at NASA in 1970-71 that reveals why so few official missions result in photographic evidence of extraterrestrial visitations.

"I had a secret clearance and we had to be investigated by the FBI

I was able to get into restricted areas, and at this time there was not a mission going on so I had some down time. I decided, as I did often when I had free time, I would walk around the building and learn other jobs, and it really kept me working there for a number of years through the layoffs because I was versatile and I could learn other jobs throughout the company.

"Look At That Over There"

"I went to a room across the hallway from where I was working every day, and a man in there that was working in the photo lab was putting a mosaic together. He had it built to about 6 x 12 feet already, and these picture panels are not very big, maybe 12 inches square. They were black and white and had been taken by a satellite. During the time I was in there I was watching him and talking to him and he pointed my attention to an area of the mosaic and said, Look at that over there.... It was a round [object with] very sharp edges, almost elliptical, just slightly elongated... You could tell it wasn't perfectly circular... It looked like a dot that trees. I knew this was accurate. I had drawn, I knew about proportions and perception and all of that, so this was a photograph that was an actual dot in the sky with a round shadow under it. I didn't see anything coming off the bottom like it would be a balloon or anything like that. It was a bright white, but again it was not like rough shadowy edges around it; it was a very crisp edge on it. He said What do you think that is? And I said, Well is it a UFO? And he smiled and said, I can't tell you that. I knew he meant he couldn't talk about it, but he knew I was right that it was a UFO. So I asked him at that point What are you going to do with this information? And he said, It's customary we airbrush these things out of the mosaic before we sell them to the public. I had heard scuttlebutt about UFOs around NASA but this was the first time that anyone had admitted to covering it up.... My mouth dropped.... I had never actually seen the proof that is going to get airbrushed out."

"I realized at that point that there is a procedure set up to take care of this type of information from the public," she added on the Elaine Douglass show.

After this experience Donna said her life at NASA changed as she began to bump into more UFO documentation. She realized that the evidence must be plentiful rather than a once in a lifetime event from which they can lock all the evidence away. "This was like on a daily basis because I just wandered in there one day. I found out, and after that I started asking questions of different people. I always made sure that we were alone and away from the site. I found a number of people that knew of the coverup."

On "UFOs Saturday Night" Donna also related some information told to her by a man she had dated while at NASA. He had been "in quarantine with the astronauts when they came back from the moon. I talked to him about seeing this saucer [in the satellite photos] and asked him if he had heard anything about that. He told me that every astronaut, every moon trip had been followed by craft, by saucers, that every one of them, every astronaut that went to the moon... they all had seen it and all had been told to keep quiet about it. They were threatened with jail and their whole retirement, everything taken away from them. This man also told me that if I ever told that he said this, that he would deny it. He would never admit that he told me all of that."

He also believed that the UFOs were instrumental in getting the disabled Apollo 13 back to Earth.

"He said that it should not have come back. I mean, uh... they had help. And that was all he would say.... He said it was impossible for that craft to have gotten back home.... [The pilots of the UFOs] didn't want that craft to investigate the part of the moon that [Apollo 13 was] going to, so they may have caused some of [the disaster] too... Supposedly we were told not to go, but we ignored it.... I guess they didn't want us to see something back there."

Later after Donna no longer worked at NASA, she met a man who had been a guard at NASA during the same time. He told her that one of his jobs was to burn a lot of photographs of UFOs. "That was his job... and he said [one time] he stopped to look at one too long and one of the other... military men hit him in the head with a gun butt and knocked him out.... because he had looked at one of the photographs too long.... He explained that it was a craft on the ground and it looked like... a regular saucer with little bumps all over it and he said it was like it was burnt. He said cows in the field all had their tails stuck straight up. At the time he said he didn't know when cattle were frightened their tails would stick straight up."

When asked if she had personally ever had occasion to airbrush anything out, Donna answered, "No, that was someone else's job," but right now she's trying to convince someone she knows who did work in the photo lab to come forward. This person was specifically told not to talk about it, but has recently been admitting to others that they had airbrushed out UFOs. She herself was never told not to talk about anything except specific projects she worked on for the Air Force.▲

Too Soon For Conclusions on The Alien Autopsy Film? 5

In a previous issue of The Hieronimus & Co. Newsletter we shared the analyses of three skeptics of the alleged alien autopsy footage: Graham Birdsall, editor of the British UFO Magazine; Kent Jeffrey, Director of the Roswell Initiative; and George Wingfield, British crop circle and hoax researcher. These three gentlemen believe their research proves conclusively that the Santilli film could not possibly show what it purports to.

There are still a great number of people, however, who believe it is too soon to make final conclusions, one of them being Bob Kiviat, the Executive Producer of the video "Alien Autopsy (fact or fiction?)" available from Lightworks Audio Visual Catalogue for $19.95, 70 minutes, phone: 1-800-795-TAPE. Bob Kiviat was interviewed on 21st Century Radio on April 14, 1996 and when asked Do you think the alien autopsy film footage is authentic? Kiviat replied, "Well, I can't say that I think it's authentic... that's not what my objective was, to come to a conclusion without the investigation being thoroughly conducted.... At this stage of the game, because of the journalistic/source relationship I have with Ray Santilli, my objective is to be patient, ride the waves of controversy, but stay focused on the ball.... The ball is Ray Santilli, and the ball is the cameraman, if he exists."

"...Guys like Dr. Milroy and Cyril Wecht seem to suggest that this is definitely a biological creature, not some kind of latex dummy filled with pig guts and what not. So with that in mind I will say... I remain open-minded to the possibility that A) it's a true alien, or B) it's something other than that. But right now, I think the jury's out, and I think it's very premature for anyone... to make a conclusion."

Regarding the elusive original 16 mm film allegedly shot in the 1940s, Kiviat confirmed that "Nobody has seen the original millimeter film footage with the exception of, to my understanding, Ray Santilli, a partner he has in the footage, and possibly myself and Kodak who have seen about, well, I know that I've seen four frames of the footage, which appear to be the early opening sequence when you're walking through the doorway into the autopsy room."

Hieronimus & Co. was concerned that major U.S. and British UFO researchers were not invited to see the film in the spring/summer '95 showings and felt that could indicate a desire to prevent experienced eyes from early scrutiny. Kiviat disagreed, saying, "Well, basically, what we have I think occurring in the context of this story breaking and myself being the journalist to break the story in America, I think what happens is when an event like this occurs people feel left out, whether you're a journalist that didn't get the scoop, [or] whether you are a researcher who won't be allowed to view the tape because you think you are entitled to....

"...Kent Jeffrey has a preconceived notion about what the Roswell incident was. Graham Birdsall... just feels there's so many smoking guns per se about why Ray Santilli should not be trusted. I disagree. I actually feel that when Ray Santilli has been asked to do certain things he had done his best to do them. The only thing he has not done, and I agree with Graham and Kent on this point, he has not made the film available for testing. This is true, and I wish he had. He has not brought the cameraman fully up, personal and public. But there's a reason for that. It's called source confidentiality. So it's not like Ray is trying to hide all the facts, I think he's just holding back certain things that he agreed to not do. (cont'd, page 11)
