Dr. Greer~ Here is my statement of the UFO incident I experienced while in the Navy [REDACTED] ~ MFA
U.S.S. Franklin D. Roosevelt CVA-42

Affidavit filed with C/SETI Committee March 30th 1997

FYI: Dr. Steven Greer , Director of C/SETI holding closed hearings with former military and civilian sources who have had UFO experiences while on active duty. These hearings are being held April 8 thru 11 1997 . I cannot be present at the closed hearings.
I have agreed to testify at any public hearings if scheduled by the Senate and have been in touch with Senator Kerrey's office.

From October 1962 to December of 1965 I served in the United States Navy on the destroyer escort U.S.S. Laffey , destroyer U.S.S.
Loeser and the aircraft carrier U.S.S. Franklin D. Roosevelt CVA-42
. I was assigned to the Operations Intelligence Division on all three ships. My duties were to display, analyze, report, record radar, radio and electronic emission data within the Combat Information Center. I was trained on Radar and Electronic Counter Measure equipment at the Naval station in Newport , Rhode Island in 1963. I served two Mediterranean cruises aboard the aircraft carrier Roosevelt from 1962 to 1964. Upon discharge from active duty I was assigned to Jones Point Naval Reserve Training Station in Alexandria, Virginia as an instructor . I trained enlisted as well as naval officers on use of navigation equipment and reporting methods particular to radar intelligence recognition. I was an expert on identifying aircraft and ships while at sea with various electronic equipment. After a major overhaul in Bayonne, New Jersey in late 1962 equipment aboard the Roosevelt could detect surface or air contacts from 300 miles on depending upon altitude of a contact. During my second active duty cruise aboard the Roosevelt while operating off the coast of Sardinia at approximately 0200 hrs. Zulu time, I was standing mid watch on a radar repeater and height finding equipment. My IFF box was enabled and I was in the process of challenging an aerial contact approaching the ship from a true bearing northeast of our course. The aerial contact was detected at 300 miles according to the calibration rings on my scope. I made several adjustments to the calibration settings because I didn't believe I had detected such a strong contact at that distance. The aerial contact was at a height over 35,000 feet then dropped to 20,000 feet in about 10 seconds upon my first 30 seconds of observation. The contact then stayed completely stationary for about fifteen minutes. I could have used the contact as a fixed point for measuring our course and speed its position was that steady. The radar return was as strong as those I had seen from ships the size of the Roosevelt herself. The unusual thing was that I had never seen an aircraft generate a radar return of that magnitude. I estimate from the signal strength for this aerial bogey that its size was at least half the size of the Roosevelt herself.

It was not a dummy contact nor an artifact of a hostile ECM (Electronic Counter Measure) system being tuned to homing frequencies generated by electronic gear aboard the Roosevelt. During this period the watch officer woke the Division Commander and informed him of our situation. U.S. Naval Task Forces operating in the med in those days were being subjected to frequent fly overs by Russian Bear aircraft with electronic warfare capability. It was our job to stay alert for such a scenario. This was no Russian Bear Turbo bomber hovering at that altitude. The Division Commander came into CIC observed the radar returns, expedited his own ECM scan of the contact and then using the ships telephone, phoned an orderly standing watch at the Captains stateroom. The Captain was appraised of the situation, ordered a course change into the wind and increased ships speed to launch aircraft. During this time I was continuing to observe the contact and watched two Phantom F4B9s once they attained sufficient altitude. The Phantom9s went to after burners vectoring to a course straight for the bogey on my scope. After a period of about 15 to 20 minutes the F4B9s were within 60 miles of the bogey due north of our course. They turned on their conical scan radar, after being on for only about ten seconds the bogey disappeared from my scope. It was then gone for at least 45 minutes. The pilots did not detect any contact on their scope were turned by the C.O. and headed back to the ship. The Captain had kept the ship on a heading into the wind during this entire operation so aircraft could be launched or recovered at will. The Phantom9s returned to the ship and were recovered. About five minutes after the recovery of the last aircraft and during the process of turning the ship back to our original course the contact winked back on again ! This time it closed from a distance of 300 miles from the ship to right above us in about 30 seconds. I estimate the bogey9s speed was around 3600 miles an hour at an altitude of 30,000 feet. I never saw any heat signature nor heard a sonic boom which one could hear frequently from CIC if a jet happened to be at that speed when passing over the ship. Someone in CIC yelled out 3dam it what the hell is that !2 I couldn't determine who made the comment. Lookouts on the port and starboard look out wings of the conning tower could not see anything above the ship with their binoculars. It was a very clear night at sea with no land in sight. ECM became jammed with personnel and I remained in CIC. They would not let me in the ECM room to examine the contact further. I don't think the guys in there knew what was going on. I heard some yelling. I noticed an officer

I had never seen before standing at the entrance to CIC as though he was guarding access to CIC and ECM. The guy looked a little like a very young Admiral Inman only he wasn't an Admiral then but a very thin, tall JG. If it was Inman, he would definitely remember this incident. It was like some preplanned security had been enabled to confine and isolate information flow between certain personnel on watch in CIC. If you were in ECM you didn't talk directly to your buddy on a radar scope, that night communication went through the guy (whom none of us had ever seen before) standing watch at the door to the companionway not through your headset you normally used. We could only talk to the bridge and lookouts. One armed Marine showed with the Captain. There was always order with the Captain. The situation was bizarre and watch personnel looked scared but calm. Watch logs were always kept particularly while underway on board a Naval ship. General Quarters practice drills are another matter but this wasn't a practice drill. The Captain did not call General Quarters. I recall vividly when it was I first determined how unusual the situation had been. The C.O. asked me later what I had put in my log if anything. He said to me this never happened<sup>2</sup>. I replied 3yes sir<sup>2</sup>. I never mentioned anything to fellow sailors or anyone else in my division even after my

Honorable Discharge from the Navy. I was Honorably Discharged from the Navy in December of 1965 at Jones Point Naval Training Center in Alexandria, Virginia. On watch that night aboard the Roosevelt were a plotter on the DRT, one on the VG, myself on the radar scope, the watch officer, a plotter in the con and two lookouts. We all normally rotated every hour but this night everyone stayed put the entire watch. It was my distinct impression from hearing airmen during chow time at breakfast that they were confused about why the heck they would have such an unscheduled launch and not be told what had been going on that night. It was their duty to arm aircraft, etc. to me they had been obviously kept in the dark on this one operation. I never said anything to them about what happened that night. During active duty I stood lookout watch night and day. I logged well over 4000 hours operating radar equipment and standing watch during active duty with the sixth fleet for two med cruises. What I experienced that night won't be forgotten. Within one week one individual on my watch was flown off the ship and we never saw him again. He was not scheduled for release nor he did have any medical problem. He was on watch in ECM that night. A important point here, on several occasions while on lookout we were able to spot satellites which traveled from pole to pole and could even see them with the naked eye sometimes. They appeared as bright white lights with no strobes, without green starboard or red port running lights. On two separate occasions we could see a larger white light fly up close to a satellite, pass it then head off at a different angle and be over the horizon in a matter of seconds. Satellites travel at 18,000 m.ph. and would be visible at sea on a clear night from horizon to horizon line for about a minute or two if you happened to sight one while looking for ships or bogeys and these things were passing them ! In both instances I reported these observations immediately to the OOD or Officer On Deck who viewed the same objects. Whether these matters were written up in official reports somewhere is another matter. I could care less if what I say here is confirmed by former shipmates I know these things happened and other matters I don't care to mention at this time. My experiences with the UFO phenomenon since discharge from active duty have become more fascinating as the years progressed. I was 19 when I had the experience in the Navy, I'm now 53. I do not "believe in" ufo's as though it were some personal philosophy or religion. I know ufo's exist, period !

In 1985 I met Dr. John Kasher a physics professor at the University of Nebraska in Omaha. His son was in one of the Architecture classes I teach at Creighton Preparatory Jesuit High School in Omaha. He's a NASA consultant at Lawrence Liver Moore Labs in California and presently a summer consultant on plasma physics at Huntsville for NASA. He is currently the State Director for the Mutual Unidentified Flying Object Network of Nebraska. [REDACTED] and I have personally investigated many cases related to UFO's. The cases involve people from age 5 to 70's across many professions. We have video tapes of private interviews, physical trace cases and lab reports. Some cases involve events which occurred on the ground simultaneous with STS-Nasa missions. There are uncut, unenhanced video tapes generated by cameras aboard the space shuttle. At present, cameras aboard the shuttle are monitored video signals are delayed several seconds and sometimes minutes before being fed to public video feed networks. Immediately after the STS-48 mission UFO mission flap in which Dr Kasher and I were involved, Nasa began to delay the live feed. NASA's premise for altering video coverage of each mission was that they didn't want the world privy to the medical condition of the astronauts. This is pure hogwash as never has the medical condition of astronauts been public knowledge through video monitoring on public channels. I have a copy of the original NASA directive which went out to all ground facilities the day after the STS-48 UFO flap. I also have listened on shortwave radio for thousands of hours to most shuttle mission transmissions on 28.650 and 14.295. I have heard astronauts mention 3alien spacecraft2 not just 3ufo's under observation2 . In one instance they flew seven astronauts to Goddard immediately after a particular mission who were debriefed in a private banquet room in a restaurant across from the main entrance at Goddard. That mission was STS-48.

Current facts and obvious military posture toward UFO's UFO's currently fly on station when the space shuttle is up. They are being fired upon by high performance aircraft (Aurora replaced the SR-71) using state of the art particle beam weapons. The very character of a particle beam does not need an atmosphere to be seen as it imparts its own coherence upon the vacuum of space. There are video tapes of STS-missions as recent as STS-80 during March 1997 wherein one can clearly see these beams coming up from the earth through cloud cover below the space shuttle. What concerns me most from field experience is that out of all the private interviews with eye witnesses not one instance of a negative or sordid nature has been told . Virtually all close encounters on the ground have been very passive, bizarre and extraordinary to ordinary people. Whatever 3ordinary2 means these days is another matter. It is with legitimate concern for American citizens and the world at large we should vigorously and immediately question reasons why UFO9s are being fired upon. I could care less if anyone believes UFO9s exist or me but believe this, if what the federal government knows about UFO9s is not forthcoming someday soon, those in the know will be held accountable by the American people. The current status of this posture and reasoning behind it should be explained to the American people as soon as possible. If these matters have been kept beyond knowledge of the Senate, Congress and the President of the United States then this world is in big trouble and we aren9t being told the whole story. If uncensored live public hearings were held today regarding some of the current scenario9s mentioned here, there would be some red faces at the Pentagon and NASA. The truth needs to be brought forward without further hesitation. More conditioning movies funded by black programs isn9t a solution they only cloud a bigger truth here. The truth must be told, now .
