

atrophied and no longer vital to survival. While speculation can be fun, there is no substantive evidence to make an educated appraisal.

To augment the dental mystery is the case of the Arizona crash, in which a top official at Wright-Patterson AFB claimed that he knew of an alien body (or bodies) that had been examined showing no teeth decay, and the case of the informant describing aliens with round, flat teeth in the 1942 east coast crash. There are other early-year cases which produced rumors of aliens with perfect teeth whose lifespan exceeded Methuselah. But I have always relegated most of these stories as baseless. On a final, positive note, Mosgrove, in an attempt to identify the origin of the mandible, on November 4, called the doctor who gave him the assignment in 1979. Now on staff of a Vets hospital in Chicago, he responded, "No comment. I still work for the federal government."

1974. A Year of Strange Strategies: Emily's Morgue Test

Emily's case is bizarre. In fact, it is unique in crash/retrieval research. She had witnessed, firsthand, a deceased alien in a morgue drawer at Wright-Patterson AFB. To her, it was like a bad dream, admitting that she has had a hard time believing her own experience -- or, why it happened.

Occurring in 1974, Emily's story could easily be brushed aside as fantasy. But, as certain details of her high-intrigue case gradually surfaced, she may have been an unwitting victim of a broader high level scheme. In this respect, I felt that her experience deserved a niche in this report. Despite the high strangeness of her case, is hers any less credible than others who relate mind-boggling experiences?

My personal involvement in Emily's case began March 3, 1993, when she consented to join Pat Packard, a local researcher, (later to become MUFON's Section Director in Southwestern Ohio), and a friend to visit me in my home. She had been reluctant to see me, or anyone else, about her experience until April 1992, when Packard first learned of the case from her friend, a business acquaintance. But, after questioning her briefly at various times, he could not come to grips in accepting it as reality. On the other hand, he admitted that Emily could have experienced something extraordinary, stating "She cried, really cried, when trying to tell about her seeing the alien cadaver."

Learning that we had a mutual interest in exotic plants, Emily brought me a tray of seedlings of a Kalanchoe species for my garden room collection of succulents and cacti and bromeliads, and some other hard-to-grow tropical plants. Having just sprinkled the tropicals, the smell of a jungle eased our way into the subject of cadavers.

Emily being an experienced artist for a large department store in downtown Cincinnati, she was offered an art job with attractive pay by her Uncle John who was a top executive of a company, now defunct, named Hoelche Environmental Services in western Cincinnati. An interview with her prospective boss, Mr. Kern, went smooth, she said, discussing environmental issues and the nature of her artwork. Hired, she was allowed two weeks to give proper notice to her former employer and was to start work on a given Monday.

During this waiting period, Emily went out one evening for a dinner party. While toasting a drink, to her surprise, Mr. Kern just happened to show up and was quick to explain how he knew she would be at the restaurant, hoping to see her. Of course, she said, he was invited to join her table.

Somehow, said Emily, the subject got onto UFOs, most of it critical. Again, surprise, Kern took issue with the critics, but she has forgotten the points of his argument. Later, privately:

he asked her if she would like to see the proof -- a real alien. Thinking he must be joking, she agreed to the challenge. According to Emily, he said, "Tonight".

I asked Emily if she felt safe with a stranger making such an unusual proposition. She said that she did because he was a friend of her Uncle John's, and too, she wondered if it might be just a test of her ability to perform on the job. They drove to Wright-Patterson AFB.

"He had the right kind of credentials to get past all the guarded gates" said Emily, adding, "At one of the guard posts, I was given a clearance badge, but, beyond that, he used a plastic key to open doors, one to an elevator." It all seemed too pat, just as though they were expecting both of us to be there."

Again, using the magic plastic key, said Emily, showing some discomfort, they entered an underground room, well-lighted, in which there was a built-in section with several tiers of drawers. During one period of lull, with Kern seemingly preoccupied by staring at the drawers, a person in uniform, unarmed, entered the room. He smiled curtly, nodded to acknowledge her presence, said a few words inaudibly to Kern, then departed through a door on the opposite side of the room. Kern then walked up to one of the drawers, pulled it open and asked her to look inside.

Emily was shocked; unable, she recalls, to utter a sound. There before her, at face level, was a small lifeless body in a zipper bag, opened to the waist. In disbelief, she said, "The eyes got me. They were so big and powerful and live-looking that I felt like I was hypnotized. Kern said nothing, but I could sense that he was watching me, my every move."

When I asked if she recognized any cameras mounted in the room, "I didn't think to look," she said, to which I responded that more than one was probably rigged to record her behavior. At that point, Emily, sitting across from me, her eyes watering and hands clasping, said that she was so unnerved at that time, she could only vaguely recall other features of the half-exposed cadaver. "It was grey, she said, about 4 feet tall with a slim torso with skin that looked like an iguana in texture." After a moment's pause, she continued, "I should know, I have a large iguana as a pet." Of the face, she remembered a small slit of a mouth and no nose. Then, after a prolonged silence, she looked at me squarely and said, "Mr. Kern invited me to touch it and I did. It was cold, but those eyes; they looked alive to me."

"On the return trip home, little was said" said Emily, "I remember trembling in the car and I guess I mumbled about the body, the morgue and secrecy, but Mr. Kern, except to remind me that I was not to tell anybody about the trip, was very quiet, not at all like he had been at the party and during the interview."

Finally, her eyes showing her inner stresses, she said, "So, I have seen the proof, but who was the real Mr. Kern? Why me? I had hoped to find out when I reported to work Monday."

Other shocks were in store for Emily. Reporting to work on Monday, she was informed by Kern's secretary that he had died suddenly of a heart attack and that her job had been canceled. And, checking the newspapers for Kern's obituary, his demise was never listed. Emily was left adrift for years in her own surreal Hall of Mirrors, wondering who was who at Hoelche's.

I had talked with Pat Packard before Emily's visit to relate that I may be able to explain the reason for her misadventure at the morgue and its connection with other high-level strategies. Based on the known data, I later told Emily that it was my belief that the Hoelche Company was a front for a special intelligence operation. Speculating further, I said, some, if not all of its personnel were undercover agents with Mr. Kern, who, using a fake name and credentials,
