Dear Dr. Greer: I know you do not receive these e-mails directly; however, I have been acquainted with a potential Disclosure Project witness. I know this individual well, as he dated my sister in high school. After graduating, he joined the United States Marine Corp where he received additional training and, at one point, became involved in the recovery of an object that crashed in Arizona in the early 80's. He indicated that, when he was called to the site, there was a very large object that had apparently crashed and was resting in large crater. As the excavation and recovery of this object was progressing, he had the opportunity to enter the crater and examine the object at close range, and was even able to touch the object. He told me that it was the most beautiful thing he had ever seen, and although it crashed, there was no apparent damage to the object. It was large and elliptical, and made of some kind of metal. As part of a three-man team, his job was to patrol the area surrounding the object, and had orders to eliminate (kill) any unauthorized personnel who came within the perimeter that had been set. The object was removed, and the site picked clean. He was able to observe the final stage of the cleanup, and indicated that there was no trace of the object or the crash. No one would ever be able to tell that anything had ever happened. I have known this individual for many years and believe that he is of the highest caliber with respect to his honesty and integrity. He first related this story to me several years ago, and recently confirmed the incident to me, and that his recollections were accurate. Like many of the witnesses, he is concerned about the loss of his military benefits, and having signed a security oath, he is concerned about the possibility of being jailed – or worse. I am writing to request some guidance regarding who I might contact and what procedure I might follow to get your people in contact with him. Clearly, by relating this story to me, he has already violated his security oath. I have a tremendous amount of respect for this individual and want no harm to come to him, but I believe that his testimony is of great importance to the project, and to the disclosure effort. I would appreciate any assistance you might lend me. Thank you, [REDACTED], B.S., J.D., State Director, MUFON.
