

Dick, I just got this from Filer's files. Perhaps it's of interest.

North Carolina Chevron Seen by Pilot

I asked the Raleigh Approach controller, "What just passed us? It was just to our south, and at our altitude, flying from a generally southwest direction to the northeast". The controller took a little longer than normal to reply. He said, "I don't have anything on radar." Then he waited a little bit longer, and asked if I had seen anything. I knew it was better, at the time, to keep my mouth shut, so my reply was along the lines of: no, I guess not. The controller didn't press, and I didn't offer anything else. This vehicle was unusual in a couple of ways. It flew on the tip of a wing, level (as it were) and didn't seem to have any problem maintaining altitude. There was no, visible, means of propulsion. It didn't leave any type of trail. It was fifty feet (plus or minus ten feet) from tip to tip, and from its nose to the trailing edge of its wing was no more than maybe twenty to twenty five feet. It was a dull grey, and no lights. There were no markings. After it passed behind the left wing, I asked to FO and FE if they had seen it. They had not. ((NUFORC Note: The witness who is a retired senior captain for a major U. S. airline. PD)) Thanks to [REDACTED] Director [REDACTED] / Editor's Note: Controllers are instructed not to acknowledge UFOs to aircrews.
