READER'S REPORTS

██████████ of Danielson, Connecticut writes of her own personal experience at home there in the eastern part of the U.S.A.:

"It was November 20, 1956, 12:45 P.M. I then lived at ██████████ in Danielson, and I was outside hanging clothes. (I had 3 young children and lots of work to do, so sometimes after they were asleep, I washed clothes and hung them out.) I saw lights moving near the horizon to the north. I thought - must be Northern Lights (Aurora Borealis). It's a clear, cold, crisp night. The lights were coming closer. I thought - must be an airplane - no, it can't be an airplane with lights that bright and low, there would have to be noise, and there is no noise, not a sound. Then I thought - must be Roman Candles - no noise, nice lights. No, it can't be Roman Candles - it's not the 4th of July. It's just before Thanksgiving (coming on November 22). Then I could see it good. It was shaped like a half a ball, yellow light was glowing from inside, colored lights glowing from inside near the bottom, revolving clockwise at a speed like medium to fast walking. It was near the tops of two pine trees right ahead of me. I thought, good, it's going to go right over my head. I can see it good. Immediately it started coming straight down. I thought - it's going to land! It was half way down, stopped immediately, and started coming forward again. I thought I got to grab the clothes off the line - it's going to come right through the clothesline. Immediately it stopped and started coming down again. I thought - it's going to land! It then stopped about two feet from the ground and started coming forward again. I thought - it's going to run right into me, I've got to step aside and let it pass. I didn't have time to lift a foot. Instantly it started going sidewise. (It was about 10 feet ahead of me.) It went sidewise a few feet till it got opposite the ell of our little house, then started going straight up! It rose 'til it could just clear the roof, then started coming straight over the roof of the ell. I thought - it's going to hit the main body of the house. Immediately it rose straight up again, then came straight over the main part of the house. I thought - it's going to hit the chimney, but it had risen just high enough to clear the chimney. I thought it was going to keep going, but it didn't. It was staying in one place, revolving, over the roof of our little house. I could see it good. It was about 8 to 10 feet high, and about as big around as our little house was square (about 25 feet across). It wasn't transparent, but almost. The proper word is translucent. The yellow light was glowing inside, and it seemed I should be able to see shadows of anybody or anything inside, but I could see no shadows. As it revolved round and round, I looked to see any doors or windows, or lines where they might be, or seams, but there were none. I looked to see if there was anything else in the sky, but there was not. there was no noise - not a sound. I thought, maybe if its electric powered, there should be a long cord. There was none. I then thought, if that is just a giant yellow light, I should be able to see the shadow of a giant filament, but there was none. The other colored lights were still showing through near the bottom. The whole thing was bright, but it didn't hurt my eyes. I thought - why not walk up on the stone step and look up under it, so I did.

Then I saw the beautiful "sockets". they were gold, like 3 giant doughnuts placed on top of each other, with 2 shiny black round bands separating them. There was a colored bulb in the bottom of the socket. On each of the 3 round shiny gold bands there was a design, writing or printing in shiny black, bright and clear. It looked completely foreign to me. The curved lines, loops, dots and dashes looked like some ancient Arabic language. The angled crooked lines looked like designs seen in Persian Rug borders, Oriental Rug borders, or even more like Mayan pyramids, or Aztec or Inca designs seen on pottery, blankets, rugs. The inscription on every gold ring was identical. I studied it and tried to figure it out but couldn't. I tried to imprint it in my brain so I could reproduce it exactly, but I couldn't. There were 24 of these sockets, each with a colored light bulb - red, green, blue, orange, yellow and white (light yellow), and then repeated in that order. About 2 feet up, there was a floor, and these sockets were stuck to the floor, evenly spaced, all around the edge. I looked at the floor. It was not transparent, but almost - translucent is the word. It seemed I should be able to see shadows of batteries or anything or anybody that might be in it, but I could see no shadows. I looked to see if there was any kind of opening, lines where an opening might be, or seams in the floor, but there were none. It was just plain, smooth material like glass or thick plastic, maybe about an inch thick, judging by the edges that hung down all around. There was no heat and no smell. I thought - those sockets are big - maybe there are batteries in the sockets. It had to have some kind of power!

Then I thought - I wonder if it's going to land on the roof? I wonder how heavy it is? I suppose it will break the chimney. My little children are sleeping upstairs. Immediately it started going forward. Then I thought - it's going to bump into the tree (a big maple in front of our house with branches nearly touching the roof). Immediately it started going sideways, just enough to clear the tree, then proceeded straight forward. I was glad it hadn't landed on the roof or hit the tree, but I was sorry it was leaving, because I wanted to learn more.

It went straight across Academy St. and revolved a few times over Blumenthal's store, then it started coming back! I thought, good, I'm going to have another chance. It came back across Academy St., then went sideways and revolved a few times over the Conn. Light and Power Co. Office. I still thought it was going to come back over me, but it went sideways a few more feet, came straight down to about 8 feet above the road, and started going north up Main St.! I thought if any cars come they will see it. But there were no cars. I went in front of my house to try and catch another glimpse of it as it passed in front of the 2 Telephone Co. buildings, but the angle of the buildings prevented that. I ran to the back of my house, to try to catch a glimpse of it as it went further up Main St., but a couple of big old houses and big old trees prevented that. I waited a few moments, did not see anything, then thought maybe it went up a side road or over Davis Park on the other side of the street. I would have followed it, but didn't walk on the street that time of night, and also I couldn't leave my 3 little ones alone in the house.

I finished hanging the clothes, went in the house (it was 1:00 A.M,) did a few things and went to bed. Next morning, when I was getting my 8 year old, [REDACTED], ready for school, I told her I had seen something in the sky last night, with a lot of lights. That's all I told her. Then after she had left, I turned on the radio to our nearest local station - Putnam, Conn. (No cars had gone by here, and all the neighboring houses were dark, but I thought somebody, somewhere, might have been in a car, up, or out and might have seen it too.) The 9:00 A.M. news had a brief mention - "There was a report of something unusual in the sky last night. It must have been a weather balloon." It was not a weather balloon. When [REDACTED] came home, I asked her if anybody at her school had said anything of seeing something in the sky with lights on and she said, "No".

Ever since, I've been trying to find answers.

It was beautiful, seemed to be observing me, and letting me study it. I wasn't scared, because every time I started to get scared, it acted in a proper way so there was nothing to be scared of. When it was near me, it seemed to be controlled by my thoughts, or even before my thought was finished. Or maybe that was just a coincidence, and it was going to do those things anyhow, and couldn't read my mind.

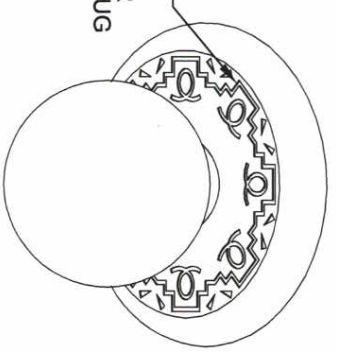

It always stayed level, never tilted, and revolved continuously, while it was going straight ahead, sideways, straight down, straight up, or hovering in one spot.

It seemed to be made from one single piece, as I could see no seams, lines, or openings. The floor, about two feet up, also had no seams, lines or openings. I wasn't inside it. I couldn't see any way to get into it or to get out of it (if I had had the chance).

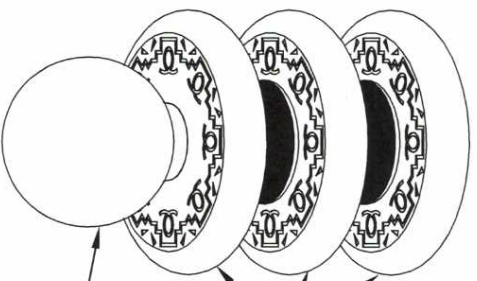

The inscription seemed to me both language and design, looked Arabic like writing or printing of any Arabic, Islamic or Moslem country - Iran, Iraq, Libya, Morocco, etc. - similar to that. The inscription on every gold band was the same. I can't do it correctly. Yours Truly,
