THE FOUNDATIONS OF INTER-PLANETARY UNITY

(Note: See pg 356, Chap. 7 for Continued Discussion of Inter-Planetary Unity)

The challenge of establishing a framework and creating the foundation for relations between human and extra-terrestrial life forms is one of the greatest challenges that our people on this planet have ^{ever} faced. ~~Because~~ ^{we} over the course of human history we have witnessed how extremely difficult it is for peace and cooperation and unity to be created amongst the peoples of the world. The culture of tribalism, ^{— explain — ecclesiastical? —} of inter-Nicene warfare, of racism, of religious hatred and animosity, of nationalism, of ideological conflicts such as those between capitalism and communism, and all the other forces which have dominated world history throughout recorded time, indicates that there is a fundamental challenge to the human spirit in establishing peaceful relations amongst diverse beings.

If we have had a challenge creating a dialogue and peaceful relations between Catholics and Protestants in Ireland, how much greater might be the challenge in creating a framework of understanding and communication between species which have evolved ^(totally under) different environmental conditions, ^{with} have different genetic makeup, ^{have} have a different fund of — knowledge, ^{different} different belief systems, ^{different} different political and social — organization, various ^{different} funds of knowledge, levels of intelligence ^{or IQ} or IQ, — emotional makeup, etc., ^{and so on} and so on. To many, the answer would be, it's — impossible.

However, it's impossible only looking back. And looking forward we see a — different process occurring, however fitfully, ^{And that is} of increasing — circles, a spiral of increasing ^{of} integration and unity. And ^{that over} over the last — 100 years, even though there have been ruinous wars and ^{there continue} there continue — to be tribal conflicts and concerns, the overall direction of movement — technologically, in the field of education, knowledge and ^{lagging behind} lagging behind it — in the geo-political realm, is that of increasing levels of unity and understanding and dialogue. Into the future we can visualize a time when, while certainly points of conflict might arise, ^{that} the world community will — have renounced international warfare and weapons of mass destruction ^{based on} — based on the common idea that we are all one people inhabiting this island of life floating in the Universe.

Ironically, one of the events which could be most powerful in cementing ⁱⁿ — the ideas of the people of the Earth that they are all one life form inhabiting — this island of life called Earth, ^{would be} would be the acknowledgement of extra- — terrestrial civilizations from other planetary systems who are here visiting us. We do not need to resort to a scare tactic to see that this could work. The comment from President Reagan, that "Wouldn't our job of creating world peace and unity be easier if we had a common alien threat to unite against and fight," is an unnecessary and actually morbid paradigm for conceiving of peace and unity and coexistence on this planet.

Our common link with each other is presumed to be that we are all biologically humans. We would suggest that there is something deeper and more profound that is the basis for our oneness with each other as people of the Earth; and which also serves as a basis for oneness or unity with sentient life forms from other planets and other star systems, and perhaps even from other galaxies. And that is, again, returning to this theme of universal mind.

As has been stated, the total number of minds in the Universe is one. And this one mind, this oneness of consciousness, of intelligent, sentient life, the basis for being awake and intelligent, is the foundation for a genuine and enduring oneness amongst humans, but also is the same foundation for oneness amongst all the peoples in the Universe.

We will no longer have the luxury of identifying with each other based on superficial, intransigent, and ephemeral characteristics; whether we are — white or black, ~~whether we are~~ Catholic or Protestant, or Jewish or Moslem; — ~~whether we are~~ male or female, ~~whether we are~~ rich or poor, a scientist or — a sanitation worker. The only foundation for human integrity and human oneness is the foundation for oneness with every life form in the Universe.

 And that is pure consciousness, mind, awakeness, that faculty that enables — higher, intelligent, sentient beings to be perceptive, to be awake, to be — conscious.

One of the problems of the materialistic basis for solidarity is that it tends to change, and alliances can fade and be cast aside. The identification, for — example, only with your tribe was useful when there was ~~only~~, ^{perhaps} maybe, one — other tribe ^{with which} that you had to deal with. It no longer becomes useful when you — deal with an entire continent of tribes or an entire planet of tribes. The — identification with your religion as the point of unity with others, because they are the same faith, is not viable in a world where we are increasingly interconnected with peoples of many faiths.

So by looking at this, we understand that we must reach ^{for a} to a more deeper — foundation, a more permanent and enduring foundation for relations amongst intelligent life forms. This conscious faculty, this unbounded mind, — this awakeness, it has been called many things. It is the foundation for our — relationship with each other that will be enduring, and also with other life forms.

It may be thought of as a highest common denominator. The common denominator which intelligent life forms, whether they are from Alpha Centauri or from Earth or from some distant galaxy, will all share by virtue of being awake, by virtue of being conscious and sentient. That conscious intelligence becomes the foundation and the point of connection not only ideologically, but operationally, as we will see in a moment.

This highest common denominator transcends the usual fractured surface of not only diversity amongst humans, but amongst all intelligent beings in the Universe. It is likely that a species of life forms which have evolved under different environmental conditions and on a different planet will have different beliefs. They will look different from us physically. They will have a different fund of knowledge. Their emotional makeup will be different from ours.

And, like the Zen exercise of not this, not that, when you begin to subtract from this equation all the ways in which we will not be like them, in fact ways in which we will be clearly diverse from them, you are left with a relatively weak foundation for connection until you reach this one central point. And that is the faculty of mind. Mind itself will become the great point of relationship amongst the diverse peoples and beings of the Universe.

If we look to that faculty, if we look to that aspect of us which is universal and which is awake, we will see that ~~that~~ ^{it} is the most enduring foundation for relationships amongst diverse beings in the Universe and that all others will be secondary to it. There is a great secondary benefit, therefore, to establishing relations with intelligent life forms from other planets. Because in doing so, we will have to reach within ourselves to find ~~that~~ ^{the} highest common denominator that we have in common, ~~therefore~~, with these diverse life forms. And by doing so, we will recognize how we are, really, all one people; that there is really one mind in the Universe shining through the individualities of every human on this planet, and we are one being in many bodies.

This is the foundation for an enduring world unity and peace and may, in fact, be one of the previously unanticipated benefits of coming to grips with the question of what a relationship with extra-errestrial life forms should be. Because it will hold up to us a large cosmic mirror. And in that cosmic mirror we will see all of humanity as being awake, ~~even as they are awake~~. And the unity of humanity will become very clear in that cosmic mirror.

The extra-terrestrial life forms, similarly, if our assessment is correct, have come to terms with this already. Because there are multiple accounts of diverse phenotypes, ^{and} diverse physiological types of life forms, working together on projects. So they, apparently, have been able to identify with this highest common denominator of relationship amongst their diverse people. As the world transitions from a tribal state, to nation state, to an international community struggling with its identity, to a genuinely integrated and functional world civilization, there will be a growing awareness of not only the oneness of humanity, but the essential oneness of all life in the Universe.

For this reason, the most powerful source of realizing relationship potential with these life forms is the experience of this universal aspect of mind. This non-local, non-linear, silent consciousness, ^{and} this is the foundation of unity amongst humans and between humanity and these other life forms. It is an unshakable and permanent identification that cannot be taken away, no matter how ^{dissimilar} diverse the intelligent life form may be. The life form may be 20 feet tall with three heads and have any number of diverse characteristics. But it is awake. And you are awake. And in that shared awakesness, you have the basis for an enduring relationship.

It may be thought of then, that the acknowledgement of consciousness and non-linear mind is ^{the} this cornerstone of the foundation of inter-planetary unity — and inter-planetary relations. Without it, the foundation is unanchored. And without it, it will be very weak. The old alliances and coalitions based on material gain, material benefit, various types of exploitation, ⁱⁿ none of these — will endure and enable us to have a sustainable, peaceful, and mutually beneficial relationship amongst Earth civilization and these other civilizations. For we have witnesses ^d how ruinous that value system has — been, even amongst humans who, ^e after all, are the same species. —

The usual identification with superficial and ephemeral characteristics does nothing but cause a temporary bonding ^e a relationship; and, ultimately, as — time and situations change, the relationship will then decay and shift.
 However, this universal constant, this aspect of every intelligent life form to be awake and to identify, therefore, with the awokeness of another life form serves as the enduring and unshakable foundation for inter-planetary relations.

Interestingly, as we grope for a way of comprehending what the basis of inter-planetary relations may be, we will always return to the common theme of what does it mean to be human and awake. And in finding the meaning of humanity, we will find the meaning of being an intelligent life form anywhere in the Universe. Because it is this transcendent and, ^e if you — will universal aspect of ourselves which enables us to be universal citizens.

The organic process of going from a tribe identity to a national identity, to a global identity to, eventually, an inter-planetary universal identity is accelerating at a rate where a decade at this time is equivalent to several centuries in the past. And so we should not dismiss either the potential or the power of this time in history to move from a period of disjointedness and separation into one of extraordinary oneness and unity.

The transition, while it may not be easy, is inevitable. And even if the geopolitical scene is still cranky and inadequate, by looking at ideas and technology and communications, we are seeing that this planet is quickly evolving into a global civilization. Environmentally it is recognized world-wide that we are all inhabitants of this one planet and what is done in New York affects people in Tierra del Fuego as far as the environment is concerned.

And this increasing degree of recognition of our inter-relatedness is accelerating rapidly. It is not yet reached the point where, in general, the essential oneness of humanity has been recognized to the point that all conflict has been eliminated. That is probably some years off; we are not there yet, certainly. However, the intimations of it can be discerned at this point. The potential of it can be described.

And on the heels of that organic integration of our planet will come the tremendous potential of inter-planetary relations. It is not too soon, therefore, to begin to discuss amongst ourselves and amongst people in the world what the foundations of inter-planetary unity may be. And if the cornerstone is the oneness which all intelligent, awake life forms share through the faculty of universal mind, then there are other aspects of the foundation which are important, if secondary, characteristics. But the primary one is that of mind.

This concept has an important operational component, as well, and it is this: Life forms which travel through inter-stellar space have been forced to come to grips with the false nature of a linear view of the universe. Linear reality is simply an inadequate paradigm to enable either communications or transportation to inter-stellar distances. And linearity becomes the great prison and box which must be transcended.

Therefore, these life forms, both to communicate and to go through what we call time/space reality, have discovered and actually put into application the universal aspect of life, both on the level of consciousness or mind and matter, and importantly as discussed earlier, the nexus or interface between mind and matter, consciousness[^] and material objects. For that reason, not only is the identification as a universal, intelligent being essential to establishing the spiritual foundation for relationships in the Universe amongst[✓] diverse people and between Earth and other civilizations, it becomes an incredibly important part of an operational system, both for communication and for understanding technological manifestations of these life forms. It becomes the talisman[^]. ~~It is the talisman, it is the essential key~~ to unlocking the potential of relations between humans and other, higher life forms in the Universe.

The consciousness which we all share, therefore, as humans and as extra-terrestrial life forms, can be seen to serve as a great cosmic network where we are always plugged in. We are constantly, therefore, one. And, so, from this level of consciousness and understanding, there really ~~are~~^{stet} only one people. There^{are}~~s~~ only one people in the Universe, and we are they. In that sense, also, there is only one being in the Universe; and every being is that being.

Now, to some this may seem like a mystical exercise and abstraction. But it has very important and long-term implications for establishing a sustainable relationship between humans and these other life forms. Because if we do not learn from the errors of our past 10,000 years of history, then we will be doomed to repeat them. And we will move into the future with this relationship with extra-terrestrial life forms and try to establish some kind of ~~relationship~~ ^{connection by alliance} based on very shaky foundations, — mutual material interests, exploitation of one against another; and these will simply not be enduring.

~~The problem is that~~ ^{the} the potential within our time in history is so great that — we cannot squander the opportunity by repeating these mistakes. In that sense, it is a time for a closure in one era in history, and the opening of a new chapter. We have come from the period of childhood in our tribal wombs into a period of adolescence with all the rebelliousness and rancor and chaos of nationalism and the nation-state. ^{And} ~~as~~ we step onto the — threshold of adulthood as a species, what is required is the recognition of the essential oneness of all life and, particularly, the essential oneness of all intelligent life forms ~~that is~~ based on something which is immovable, — ^{and} ~~that is~~ permanent, ^{that is} in that sense a solid foundation. This can be — nothing less than the highest common denominator, awakeness.

For that reason and in the training which we have undertaken for our various communication teams, notwithstanding all the different logistical and other considerations, the foundation for the training has been the experience of oneness of mind. To sit quietly and do nothing, to experience simple awakeness, to simply be aware of awareness, and to own that experience, and to be able to call on it easily is the most important training for someone engaging in relations with other intelligent life forms in the Universe. Because no matter how diverse their language and customs may be, they are awake and you are awake. And if you can connect if only on that basis, then all the others will take care of themselves. The diversity will no longer become a problem, but a source of beauty and of joy, and of wonder.

However, if this highest common denominator of our oneness is neglected, the diversity will be a source of worry; will be confounding, will be perplexing, and ultimately ruin us. In this sense, contemplating the concept of humans as ambassadors to the Universe, be a most important credential for that ambassador would not be any normal state of education or knowledge, but would be the ability for that individual to experience that aspect of their own awakeness that is universal and which is therefore resonating with every intelligent life form and species in the Universe, no matter how unusual they may be, And no matter how divergent they may appear.

I think the path of safety for anyone looking into establishing some type of communication with extra-terrestrial life forms would be to begin to experience the universal aspects of themselves first. Otherwise, they will be tossed amid the storms and waves of diversity on this vast ocean of universal life. And it is a vast ocean. It is large, and it is unending. And without one's ship being anchored into some deep, and calm, and still waters — which have a universal quality to them, it will simply be overwhelming.

Beyond that, the experience of universal mind and the universal aspect of oneself has another profound consequence. You not only resonate and identify with every conscious, intelligent life form and, ultimately, with the Universe itself which is awake and alive; but you begin to experience the capacity to transcend your own fears and your own individual insecurities and your own doubts and your own sense of smallness. From a practical point of view, this is invaluable.

Speaking from personal experience and, I am certain, on behalf of other CSETI/RMIT members who have had close and sometimes bizarre encounters with these life forms out in the field, the ability to be grounded and established in this universal field is, indeed, the greatest protector from your own primal monkey-mind that is wanting to take over and result in a fight-or-flight response, or to jump to unwarranted conclusions, or to become overwhelmed with the sense (of the unknown, or fear) of the unknown. —

~~Krishna, in speaking to Arshuna on the battlefield in the Bhagavad-Gita, said,~~

In the Bhagavad-Gita, Krishna said, in speaking to Arshuna on the battlefield,

"A little of this alleviates all fear."

The 'this' that he was referring to is the experience of universal mind. And, indeed, the reason that it alleviates all fear is that the individuality cannot be threatened if the individual is beginning to identify with the universal. If the unbounded [^] and universal [^] and eternal aspect of oneself is where your true identity is, then threats to your sense of ego, to your knowledge base, to your physical body do not seem terribly significant and are not overwhelming. And encounters with unknown and diverse life forms are not overwhelming to that ambassador or to that researcher or to that person having an experience.

(what?)

This is why, notwithstanding the tremendous [^] heaped on this effort, we have insisted consistently that the experience of this aspect of ourselves, this calm, enduring, universal aspect of self is the foundation for universal relations [^] but is also the first prerequisite for anyone wishing to enter into some type of [^] dialogue and an enduring, sustainable, longitudinal, long-term relationship with diverse life forms out in the Universe. Because, by definition, they will not be human; they will be something other than human. And that otherness is so diverse that we must find a point of commonality beyond just being human.

This thread of pure, silent Consciousness, is indeed the golden thread that links all sentient, intelligent life forms in the Universe & Mind.
Being. If you wish to call it that, the state or field of beingness, awakeness. We have the potential to identify with this universal aspect of self, which is the bridge linking us to other life forms

It requires, therefore, the realization of the meaning of humanity; and the reality of the human being is that of a universal being. Even though we will always identify with mother Earth and with our human species, it does not mean that ~~that is all we will identify with.~~ ^{it is} Because we have the potential rewrite

to identify with this universal aspect of self, which is the bridge which links us to other life forms. ^{it is} It is, indeed, the golden thread that links all sentient, intelligent life forms in the Universe ^{is} this thread of pure, silent consciousness. Mind. Being. If you wish to call it that; the state or field of beingness, awakeness.

So, while the pursuit of the experience of that state has been relegated to the mystic or to the monk or to the poet, we are entering into a time when ~~the experience of that state~~ ^{it is} will be the most practical and essential component of being a human and ~~of being~~ ^{and} an inter-planetary citizen. While we will possess an extraordinary, well-developed technological society, there will need to be a parallel deepening in our experience of our universal nature. And by experiencing this universality, we will become citizens of the cosmos as well as of the Earth.

As mentioned earlier, the experience of this universal highest common denominator has another practical application. And that is in the area of communication. It enables beings to communicate over vast distances of space/time. But it also allows for communication to take place ~~irrespective~~ ^{without regard} of language base. It is the ultimate universal language. Because through the faculty of non-local or non-linear mind, information can be conveyed regardless of the language of its origin; and it will surface into the awareness of another sentient life form in a way that they will understand it.

In this sense, it becomes the universal translator, as well as the foundation for the relationship, and has immense practical applications. Even immense technological applications, where the non-local aspect of consciousness linking up to the non-linear aspects of matter, will enable instantaneous communication ^{independent} ~~irrespective~~ of the speed of light or electro-magnetic energy.

And ^{due} therefore an operational familiarity with mind itself will enable us to become competent in extra-terrestrial technologies and extra-terrestrial communication systems. In this sense, a subject which, again, has always been considered an impractical and abstract one, will begin to be seen as immensely practical and the fundamental basis for the new science and technologies of the coming ~~thousand~~ ^{being done} or several thousand years. Indeed, it is already at that point from research that we are aware of going on on ^(1997?) this planet in 1995. How much more so when we begin to contemplate building a bridge between humanity and these other non-human civilizations, which by definition, in traveling through inter-stellar space, are linking up to these universal constants.

This field, then, of universal mind is the ultimate unified field. It goes beyond just unifying the forces Einstein wished to ~~unify~~ ^{form into one.} Because it not only bridges mind and matter, and matter and matter, and energy states with matter; it bridges individual intelligent life forms who heretofore have used themselves as little islands separated out in the Universe. When, in reality, we are plugged in [↑] as light bulbs into the same electric current in a city [↑] into this one source of awakeness and this same generator of energy and consciousness. It, therefore, becomes the most practical pursuit that anyone contemplating the future relations between Earth and other civilizations could consider.

This is not something a lot of people want to hear. Because it challenges not only the linear and Cartesian paradigm; but it emphasizes a state that is universal. And, therefore, renders transient the usual point of control and identity that humans share with each other and which [↑] also [↑] have been a point of conflict among humans. Vested interests which would like to see a continued degree of tension and disharmony occur on this planet [↑] would rather ^{we} ~~us~~ not look to this enduring state of oneness and would like to label it all manner of nonsense. But it is the foundation for universal as well as world peace; and it has too great an importance and preeminence to neglect or to have us deterred in its pursuit by the nay-sayers, the noisy negativists, the debunkers, and the ossified dinosaurs who would like to hold us into an era of Cartesian linear imprisonment.

Beyond this, there are other components for our foundation for universal relations and inter-planetary unity. One of them is the affirmation that the pursuit of a relationship with a non-human species must be done, first and foremost, in a spirit of mutual benefit between humanity and these other life forms and not in an exploitative frame of mind. One of the great mistakes of the last 50 years which have not been chronicled by our historians, but which hopefully soon will be, is the unilateral pursuit, by national powers, national security interests, of extra-terrestrial technologies in an exploitive way and, often, in a unilateral way.

The exploitation of one people over another, while an understandable, albeit tragic, pattern in human history, cannot be allowed to be a chief operating factor in our relationship with these other life forms. It is quite clear that they will not permit it; and that it will be dead on arrival if it is attempted.

The principle of enduring relations amongst diverse people, humans and extra-terrestrial civilizations, must embrace, therefore, the concept of mutual benefit and a sustainable long view on this; rather than the short-term gain and exploitation such as the acquisition of extra-terrestrial technology for building better bombers. The motivation behind our relationship must be on a higher plain than that. It does not preclude enlightened self-interest by any means; because there are certainly points of exchange which could take place, whereby these extra-terrestrial life forms may benefit and where certainly human life could be enriched here. And one could list a whole array of these that span from health, medical systems, cures for certain diseases, energy systems that are non-polluting, etc.

But this should always be pursued in the framework of consent, mutuality, sustainability, and non-exploitation. Unfortunately, we have a very ingrained history of not doing that. You need look no further than recent world history to see the proclivities of humanity to rapaciously dominate one group over another, and to exploit one group over another, to use whatever powers, persuasive, military, or otherwise, to unilaterally benefit and exploit one group over another.

But we have to ask ourselves, where has this ^{taken} ~~gotten~~ us? It has ^{brought} ~~gotten~~ us into an extraordinarily difficult and precarious situation. And it clearly should not be a paradigm that we transfer into inter-planetary relations. The problem is we are creatures of habit. And ^{as} creatures of habit, we tend to think back to familiar ways of responding and looking at the world. And

cc
 In this sense, it will take a tremendous amount of global self-awareness and — restraint to prevent the type of exploitation, unilateral pursuit of interest that has have caused the problem we have seen on this planet. — rushed into

 We should not be disheartened in thinking that this is impossible, simply — attained because we have not yet achieved it. The fact that we have not yet — accomplished achieved it simply means that there are some lessons we have yet to learn. — still

And we will learn them, because we must.

In order for this planet to survive much past the year 2100, it will have to come together in a state of cooperation to work on matters of population, stop environmental destruction, disarmament, eliminating weapons of mass — demolition destruction, and other important issues. And so, it is not a question of "Can — we?" It is a matter of when. Because otherwise the alternative is the — annihilation of this planet as a viable venue for intelligent life.

Those lessons we are better off learning sooner rather than later; cc Because — the clock is ticking, and the need for global coalitions of cooperation and peace is very acute. There is also a tremendous need to extend that now. — not 100 years from now into our thinking with these extra-terrestrial life — forms. Particularly when we consider the fact that there are already efforts — underway on behalf of planet Earth through these covert operations, to — exploit these life forms and to put ourselves into a posture of conflict with them, based on presumed hostility on their part or based simply on the fact — that we do not understand them, or the assumption that we are superior to them.

Let us analyze this for a moment. Why were African-Americans enslaved?

They were black; they were at a different level of technological development; they had different customs. And, therefore, the Europeans felt that they could be viewed as sub-human; and by de-humanizing them, they could rationalize the atrocious consequences of slavery for several hundred years as a very dominant global institution. When Europeans came to this country and saw Native Americans, they saw that they were savages. Why? They didn't have their belief system. The Judeo-Christian belief system was not operating, therefore they were savage. They had a different way of looking at the world; they had a different body appearance and customs. Therefore, they, too, were de-humanized and viewed as sub-human. When the tribes in Rwanda fought each other, even though they were of the same race, but because their tribal identities were different, one would attempt to exploit the other.

give Now these tendencies which humans have, and which are deeply ingrained but — catastrophic, simply must be transcended. Interestingly, the clearest way to transcend them is to identify with that highest common denominator of universal mind, whereby no intelligent life form, in fact, no creature great or small is viewed in an exploitive way. And, for that reason, would be honored and made sacred and respected.

So, a component of our future relations with extra-terrestrial life forms ^{which} — would enable us to have an enduring relationship ^{involves} not only the — identification with this universal component, but a conscious attempt by the peoples ~~of this world~~ and by the institutions of this planet, ^{these} that are yet to be — identified and evolved, to renounce once and for all unilateral, ^{selfish} exploitive — ^{utilization} motives in our relations, however early they may be, with these extra- — terrestrial life forms.

In addition to this, another hallmark or component of the foundation of inter-planetary unity is the ability to identify with extra-terrestrials as equals.

Earlier it was said that these life forms have a common thread with us, even though ^{the species} they may be very different. We can, ^{accordingly} therefore, view them as equal — to us and, ^{thus} therefore, avoid the disastrous consequences of either deifying — them and viewing them as so superior that we cannot approach them, or — of demonizing them and viewing them as inferior to us, and, ^{consequently} therefore, — beneath our contempt and, ^{so} therefore, worthy of being exploited. This is a — very key component to healthy relations amongst humans and human — societies. ^{it is} It is an even more vital one between humanity and these extra- — terrestrial life forms ¹ that we recognized ^{is} that while we may not be the same, ^{we are} that ~~we are~~ through this highest common denominator, equal. We are all universally connected and aware beings. And as such, we are one being.

Q: You are asking for a quantum leap here.

A: Yes! We are asking for a quantum leap. And you have hit the nail on the head.

Q: I mean, women are still not totally considered equal. So, and here we are supposed to take the alien, you know. . .

A: Let's speak to this for a moment.

Men and women are not the same. And ~~we are not~~ ^{we}, but we are equal, black and white, gay and straight, Catholic and Moslem. ^{isn't} All this diversity, there is difference, but what we confuse ourselves with is trying to make sameness become equality. Equality is not to be confused with sameness. There can be tremendous diversity, and yet there can still be a transcendence ~~to~~ ^{is} [instead, into, in a?] equality. And ^{isn't} this does require a quantum leap from where we are now, ¹ ~~But~~ ^{and}, it will occur.

Keep in mind that the growth in knowledge and the growth in human society has seldom been incremental. It is recounted historically incrementally; but in reality if you look at ^{this growth it has} things, they have occurred in a quantum leap. ^{society} They have gone through transitional phases that, over the scope of the history of ~~the~~ the human race and ~~the history of~~ Earth, really happen very suddenly. We ~~are~~ are at that point. We are on the cusp of this period of going from the state of separation and chaos to one
