

What years did these guys work? I was chief of security, both physical and operational, from 1980-1990. All the X-ray techs worked for E-Systems. General Electric didn't handle the X-ray teams. If you are speaking about the security techs at the ECP (entry control points), then it was Wackenhut. CORE pertains to energy weapons research. Security Clearances were color coded. So I would question whether your friends actually worked there. There were different levels of access controls, which were different from Sec Clearances. In the real sensitive areas, we had an exchange badge system. Everyone, who worked inside A-51, had a password for a particular area. Ask your friends their passwords. That will tell me whether they are frauds. Besides, unless your friends had a special access clearance and special mission training, they would never have had access to any of the visitors. The visitors were isolated in a special containment facility (SCF). Virtually no one had access to that facility unless they were on the special access control roster (SACR-11) and had the special mission training (SMT-11). I can assure you that list was extremely limited. The visitors did not leave the SCF. The security team that guarded the visitors consisted of USAF Security Police in the rank of E-7 and above. Every single person who had access to or contact with a visitor was listed on a Sensitive Contact List (SCL). The time, date and length of contact was documented. The visitors never wandered around or left the SCF. There is a special reason for this, which is classified.
