

Subj: Fwd: BG [REDACTED]
Date: 1/17/2006 11:24:02 AM Eastern Standard Time
From: [REDACTED]
To:  DrSGreer

File - [REDACTED]
[REDACTED]

Steve, Just got this from [REDACTED] and I have not replied. Any thoughts on what I should say or not? Maybe someone has gotten to him and he is beginning to squirm! And if it was a preliminary article, why did he not say so. What a slimball!

Ted

In a message dated 1/16/06 8:24:59 PM, [REDACTED] writes:

Good Evening, D [REDACTED]

As you are aware, I have been attempting to verify the rank claimed by your cousin. As I have tried to make clear, I have been unable to do so, which I find worrisome. However, I also tried to make it clear that the information I had located was not the end all of the discussion. The National Guard Bureau, for example, told me that those holding the rank after 1995 (meaning having served actively with the National Guard after that date) should be in their database. Those who had retired prior to that date might not be there.

In fact, it was that way every where I checked. As a general officer, he should have been there, but that he wasn't didn't necessarily rule him out as a general. However, if he served in the North Carolina National Guard, an assumption on my part given his current residence and the information provided on the biography page of his law firm, he couldn't have been a JAG officer and reached flag rank.

If there is any information that you might supply to help resolve this would be greatly appreciated. I will be more than happy to take down what I consider a preliminary article and replace it with one that verifies his credentials as a general officer.

Thank you in advance for your response.

[REDACTED]

Forwarded Message:

Subj: BG [REDACTED]
Date: 1/16/2006 8:24:59 PM Eastern Standard Time
From: [REDACTED]
To: [REDACTED]

Good Evening, [REDACTED]

As you are aware, I have been attempting to verify the rank claimed by your cousin. As I have tried to make clear, I have been unable to do so, which I find worrisome. However, I also tried to make it clear that the information I had located was not the end all of the discussion. The National Guard Bureau, for example, told me that those holding the rank after 1995 (meaning having served actively with the National Guard after that date) should be in their database. Those who had retired prior to that date might not be there.

In fact, it was that way every where I checked. As a general officer, he should have been there, but that he wasn't didn't necessarily rule him out as a general. However, if he served in the North Carolina National Guard, an assumption on my part given his current residence and the information provided on the biography page of his law firm, he couldn't have been a JAG officer and reached flag rank.

If there is any information that you might supply to help resolve this would be greatly appreciated. I will be more than happy to take down what I consider a preliminary article and replace it with one that verifies his credentials as a general officer.

Thank you in advance for your response.

A black rectangular box used to redact a signature.