

OPERATION BLUE FLY RESEARCH PROJECT

~~CONFIDENTIAL~~ Director

January 13, 1993

Phone: [REDACTED]

Dear Editor,

On November 19, 1993 the Operation Blue Fly Research Project started the release of its 169 page, "Report to Congress", to members of the United States Congress. It is the hope of the Operation Blue Fly Research Project that members of Congress will take the report seriously and not consider it just another attempt to get Congress to hold hearings into the existence of UFO's or Flying Saucers. I assure you, this is not the intent of the report.

In order to be as objective as possible, the report is based solely on the U.S. Government's own documents as released through the Freedom Of Information Act. Also, I put aside my personal reliefs, as well as eyewitness testimonies.

Using the U.S. Government's own documents, the report concludes that the U.S. Government had (and continues to have) a UFO Investigations program outside of Project Blue Book that investigated those cases considered to have some effect on "National Security". Also, the U.S. Government, under "Project Moon Dust" and "Operation Blue Fly" carried out military operations to recover, any where in the world, non-U.S. space objects that impacted with the earth and objects of unknown origin. Furthermore, these three peace-time missions remain highly classified, in the interest of "National Security". Please note, the report makes no effort to explain UFO's or the recoveries of "objects of unknown origin". Nor does the report suggest that Congress should attempt to do so.

The report does conclude that Congress should call for hearings into these programs solely because there exist no evidence that any member of Congress has ever been briefed as to these types of activities being carried out by the American Intelligence Community. To be sure, when members of Congress have asked the Defense Department questions about these activities on my behalf, the response was, "These missions have never existed." We proved to the members of Congress involved that "these missions" did, in fact, exist and that they were lied to by the Defense Department.

The one finding within this report that becomes a serious charge, is that these activities were, apparently, conducted without the knowledge or consent of Congress.

If we recover space objects belonging to a foreign state, we are required by international law to return them to the launching authority. Have government agencies taken it upon themselves to disregard this law and not inform Congress that they have violated international law?

Various American Intelligence Agencies have records on several hundred falls of "space debris". Many of these records remain highly classified in the interest of "National Security". Some of these falls have caused property damage and have come very close to costing human lives. Some of these falls have taken place here in the United States. Does not the American People, little lone the American Congress, have a "right" to know the truth of such events as these? What does the American Intelligence Agencies, that are fighting so very hard to keep this information from the American Public and members of Congress, hope to gain and why?

The only questions that the report is trying to address is the legality of these programs and the legality of not keeping members of Congress informed as to these types of activities.

Sleep well tonight. Your American Intelligence Community is watching for the next fall of non-U.S. "space debris" or "objects of unknown origin".

Sincerely,
