A MODERN ALCHEMIST:

Richard Alan Miller has been at the forefront of many fields during his long and varied career. A solid-state physicist with graduate work at MIT, Miller was involved in groundbreaking work for cloaked agencies in the late '60s and early '70s. A colleague of Dr. Stanley Krippner, Miller co-authored in 1973 the paper The Holographic Concept of Reality — a document whose implications for psychoenergetic systems are only now beginning to be realized.

Like so many idealists of his era, Miller became quickly disillusioned with the severe ethical compromises forced on him by what he recognized as corporate manipulation. After a brief stint as an engineer at Boeing, Miller left the corporate world in disgust and entered the more spiritually satisfying world of the occult. He opened Beltane Books in Seattle and swiftly became "the Herman Slater of the West Coast". At this time he penned several works including his classic The Magical and Ritual Use of Herbs.

Miller has recently co-authored, with his wife Iona, The Modern Alchemist, hailed by Stanley Krippner as the most "illuminating" study of Alchemy since Carl Jung. Before its publication, Miller had used an electronic form of the book as teaching material for his on-line course in Metaphysics, taught on America Online.

CC: Tell us some stuff about yourself.

RAM: Stuff? "Stuff and junk" is the form of George Carlin — "Stuff is my things, and junk is yours." With that, I would recommend we start our "first journey" together, as a metaphor, by discussing what I do right now. I am now considered to be the largest spice broker in North America, and third largest in the world — and, I teach Metaphysics for IES (Interactive Educational System) on America Online, a "floating campus" on the so-called "crystal wind."

You may remember from history studies in high school that "since recorded history, the country which controlled the spice trade has also controlled world trade." This archetype has been a fact, even with Frank Herbert's novel; about Dune. "How can this be? For he is the Kwisatz haderach."

Two years ago, the USDA approached me to set up my herb and spice writings on their SANS (Sustainable Agricultural Network System), but I decided to keep it with my own Metaphysics Library (ML) on AOL — the two enhancing each other. There are more than 500 new possible business plans on alternative agriculture for those who wish to continue to live in a rural community. While you won't find all of those in the ML yet; I am only just now preparing them for upload and they will be in there by the time of the release of this interview.

During the last ten years, I've put together more than 500 detailed technical crop reports on various spices and herbs. This included seed sources, how to farm each as a cash crop, harvesting, processing, marketing, and even regenerative programs for sustainability. There are no such documents of this type anywhere else — except, perhaps, from such previous sources as the Soviet Union/German trade. Each report is equivalent to a major book.

From that perspective, I am considered to be "Rome." No one else offers the marketing perspective and the vision for the future of agriculture in North America. My books Native Plants of Commercial Importance, and Forest Farming, provide the framework to afford those living in the rural Pacific Northwest to now have a chance at being able to continue to make a living there — even after Spotted Owl legislation.

Of course, this is all a metaphor in that what I am really attempting here is to offer a form of sovereignty to those who currently wish to live in rural parts of North America. Most are considered too dysfunctional to live in a city. Actually, I would say that those who are capable of living in the cities of today must in fact be dysfunctional to cope — a form of "armoring?"

We all seek Autarch, a Greek word for "supreme individual sovereignty." My father put it this way: "There are three ways of being in this world — the Vulgar, the Adept, and the Exempt. The Vulgar get audited, the Adept gets money back from IRS, and the Exempt do not pay taxes — they have a 501.C.3." What I am doing with the herb and spice trade, then, is attempting to teach "Union with Self." It is a "state of mind," not of either money or position.

How I do it with Spotted Owl land is simply "redefine" what a "natural resource" is from that region, and then developing a market for it. If I can see it in my "mind's eye," I can make it part of their reality. And really, my work with herbs and spice has nothing at all to do with them. It was the same reason Frank Herbert chose "spice" for the theme behind Dune — it is archetypal.

I like to respond to questions in metaphor, letting the reader determine for themselves what "I'm actually saying." Like Art, this is how one creates a "myth" — or your so-called conspiracy. And Ritual (like Magick) is the celebration of that Myth. It is an artform which previously had only been seen in the "poetry of that action." [Videru Telemahandi, an electronic guru in the cult film Miller co-wrote, Eat the Sun.]

CC: What did you do before you got into the spice business? Tom Lyttle (publisher of Psychedelic Monographs and Essays) tells us you grew up in a Buddhist monastery. I believe he said it was of the Shaolin sect. I'd like to hear more about this.

RAM: Yes, I lived in the Philippines for a number of my early years and was provided much of my education from Buddhist missionary schools. My father was part of Naval Intelligence, stationed in Indochina.

I studied forms of Buddhist meditation during this period, and later when I came to the United States, a special form of Hung Gou (Dragon) with John Leong (Seattle). My background also included Tai Chi Chaun as a "martial art" from Chaun Te Chung (Vancouver, B.C.). Both were true Sefu. It was this training that taught me how to change my perception of time through "taun tien," or breath control. This is, in effect, is how Tai Chi can be "experienced" as a martial art.

CC: How did you become interested in the occult, magic, and ritual?

RAM: My first experience was as a child in high school. I was part of a study conducted by Duke University, later known as The Foundation for the Study of Man. My mother was a known clairvoyant who had been observed prior. They were checking the children to see if there was a hereditary passing on of skills. It turned out, I am a "transmitter" rather than receiver. However, using a scientific technique based on the work of Milan Rizal, I was able to win the 1st National Psychic Tournament at the Gnosticon Conference, 1975, sponsored by Llewellyn Publications, using specific models developed in a recent paper during that period. There were many world-class psychics there. A copy of the paper on how this works is available from the ML.

My first actual formal training began with Theosophy. From there I explored Rosicrucians, Wicca, and Free Masonry. Soon, after reviewing the options, I came to the conclusion that magic held the most promise. I joined a lot of magical groups on a more or less casual basis. I found out about them through friends, meetings, and going to weird places. You hear a rumor, and you pick it up and check out the lead. Then you meet more people and they show you something else. The next thing you know, you are in front of the real thing and you have some decisions to make about whether you are going to participate formally or not.

CC: Well, when you mention these different groups are you talking about initiations and going through training and that sort of thing?

RAM: Each group had their own entrance exams and/or demonstration of ability for grade. I originally was collecting these things like merit badges. I wanted access into certain kinds of groups which could demonstrate religious experiences through their initiation processes.

CC: This brings up the questions of semantics. So, what would you call a religious experience? Could you describe that for me?

RAM: For me it was a type of connection with something so far beyond me that I was experiencing it rather than having knowledge of what was happening. It was not so much a knowing as a kind of emotional catharsis for me. It was like a pivot point or a landmark or a point in space/time that I could use for orientation and use as a tool to go somewhere else.

CC: I guess I should say, did you feel that you were in the presence of divine forces or what? When you use the word "religion" it is such a loaded term.

RAM: Mystical experience is much closer to my meaning than religious experience. I tried to choose it as a word that more people would relate to, but it was not orthodox religion. It is a more direct mystical experience.

CC: So basically, once you started interacting with these groups that is when you began learning about ritual, I suppose.

RAM: Yes, tricks of the trade, shortcuts. In my apprenticeship I learned the whys and wherefores of structuring ritual. Essentially it means preparing a switch to go from profane into "sacred" space. If you prepare a ritual correctly, you have a switch to turn off the experience so it doesn't take over your personality.

I've found that many times people have an uncontrolled vision or psychic experience and it frightens them. It led my mother, for example, to suppress her ability. What I sought, realizing I was telepathic, was a degree of control. Probably the whole concept of control is illusory, but it was one thing that attracted me to ritual magic over other kinds of mysticism. Also, there is healing within the mysteries sometimes.

There are other aspects important in ritual also. You set up your form of psychological protection. If you drive an automobile, you know what a seatbelt and an airbag mean.

Those are a part of your automobile's overall design. A ritual is done similarly, metaphorically speaking. You want to have a sense of protection or availability of protection. Also it brings a cleansing, allowing a finer focus of attention.

Some psychics use no protection and fall indiscriminately into trance and are "taken over" by a spirit which might be benign but could just as easily be malevolent. It is difficult to know even though these spirits assure you they are not bad. You have no way of knowing where that source of energy is coming from.

If you draw a circle of protection, using a ritualistic format, you clear a working space and call in specific energies or archetypes. Its been used for centuries — tried and true. Most new age channeling is done with no preparation. This cleansing process for inner work is called a banishing preparation. Prior, you may even take a ritual bath or sweat. Those who automatically or indiscriminately fall into a trance state are open psychologically to the phenomena of possession by seemingly alien forces.

CC: Speaking of alien forces, you have admitted to being a "Man in Black" (MIB) for the Army. Have you learned to eat Jell-O, yet?

RAM: Actually, I didn't follow anyone around, and my research was not centered on UFOs — which looks to be one of your central themes. I was one of their (the Army's) "bright boys" that got called in when they wanted answers — lots of questions, of course.

I didn't even wear black — mostly tennis shoes and sweat shirts. Remember: I was a physicist, not an engineer. And the Jell-O stuff? Is that from Whitley Strieber? Whenever I think of Jell-O, I think of Donovan (Mellow Yellow). He was into witchcraft, but not stupid stuff like Stevie Nicks.

CC: How did you get a job as a "Man In Black" and what sorts of projects did you work on?

RAM: When I got out of graduate school in 1968, I went to work for a branch of the army (via the Pentagon). I reported to Dr. Carl Schliecher (Full Bird Colonel) as a physicist investigating paranormal phenomena. One study was to look under an electron microscope at what was believed to be fragments from a UFO.

My background was solid-state physics (MS), and then plasmas in solids at MIT. What I observed at U. of Chicago was not from this level of technology. The fragments had been welded on a sub-molecular level, somewhat in agreement with current theories available from super-string theory. It formed an inter-dimensional weave, sort of... It was obviously manufactured and beyond our current technology. That was 1968.

Regarding an artifact that I studied in 1969, I would like to be able to tell you what I observed, but I am still not sure myself. Here is what I did find:

1. The specific samples I looked at appeared to be a foil of some kind — 0.03 mm. It appeared to be a metal of some sort, somewhat like that used for gum.

2. When crumpled, it would reform to its original uncrumpled form — somewhat like rubber might when squeezed.

3. When I fired a 50-cal. cannon at it, it crumpled around the bullet. When I examined the impact point, there were no lattice defects or damage at the point of impact.

4. When observed on a molecular level, I found no lattice forms which I could identify. I am a solid-state physicist, with an excellent background (during that era). It appeared to me to possibly have been bonded on a submolecular level. This would make it about 10X harder than diamond. And yet — it was non-rigid at all lattice points.

5. It also appeared to have a variable band level for excitation emission — especially in the hard X-band.

When asked how all this might be possible, I suggested dimensional (or scalar) physics, which was only just beginning to be postulated at that period. During that time I used what is known as Clifford Algebra. This led me to some interesting concepts, but I never had time to fully develop these concepts into tests.

I was then taken into a different project and was never requested to investigate further on these particular artifacts. But I did see a number of other artifacts which appeared to have somewhat similar characteristics.

What does this all mean? In that regard, I'm not sure we are really asking the right questions. More, I'm not sure study of the physical plane is where we will find answers. If you want to know more about this aspect, I strongly urge you to read Keith Thompson's book Angels & Aliens. He proposed that this phenomena (aliens/UFO) is archetypal and part of our existence in 4-Space.

He offers several excellent models on how we project ourselves into this reality, including abduction and artifacts. All is suggested to be projections from something other than our physical selves. This is often why your very best physicists are interested in metaphysics. Meta = beyond. I know of no law (except Maxwell's) which has lasted longer than 20 years. Even Maxwell's equations do not address the so-called scalar ("virtual") aspects of monopoles and other seriously missing components to make this relations between electric and magnetic fields.

CC: In your online posts you speak of a device you call "The Wire." What is this all about?

RAM: When I was working as a bio-physicist for the Department of Anesthesiology at the University of Washington I invented (and made) special catheters for monitoring instantaneous aortic output (26 MHz). I also helped design and built biofeedback monitoring equipment (circa 1970). I now have an operational device called "The Wire." I use German Acupuncture (Mora/Indumet) equipment to drive specific wave-shaped EM pulses into the brain — it is a literal form of "electronic drugs."

In fact, I also have a complete Autogen (German) bio-feedback system, even more complete than the VA Domiciliary for the VA Hospital in Roseburg — state of the art. This is used to monitor effects from the use of Mora/Indumet acupuncture treatments, using EM pulses on specific point of the body (brain, glands, smell). I can wave-shape and set duration with this device. As a total unit, I call it "the Wire," a new form of "electronic drug" — with a context in rituals used to perform Sex Magick.

In my book, The Diamond Body (unpublished) I describe the specific sacred geometry which make this device possible. The geometry acts as a "drug," allowing specific parts of consciousness through what are known as Dimensional Gates. This is discussed in even more detail in the forthcoming book Electro-Magick. I use Clifford Algebra to describe these dimensions beyond 4-Space. As I've stated, I actually have a working prototype in Grants Pass right now.

You would be most welcome to visit. Would you like to "play a game?" I suspect that "the very worst thing that could happen is that you came out of this experience without change" (Leary). "We're going for the hearts and minds of America." — Videodrome

Also, please note that Iona and I have actually written 12 further books called The Holistic Qabalah. The Modern Alchemist (Phanes Press) was basically written to provide definitions of the terms used. Pantheon (unpublished) then offers specific guidance (as a book of tarot), and the series then starts with Malkuth. Malkuth, Path 32 on the Tree of Life, and Yesod are all now available for download from the ML.

CC: So you see this online class as central to the dissemination of your work?

RAM: Of course. Are you aware, for example, that Time Magazine offered an interview two months ago with six of the leading computer experts — all stating they now believe that a sentient entity now "lives" on the Internet? Further, they all six think that it is "hostile," introducing super-viruses that are virtually undetectable by our current modern technologies. "What does this all mean?" (asked Percival as he held the Grail). It might take on some interesting directions of its own. For example, why is the occult BBS the fastest-growing trend in the national BBS community? New York had 800 new BBS last year, 600 of which were "pagan." Why is that?

CC: Good question.

[Miller's Metaphysics classes meet on Monday Nights, 6:00 PM PDST (9:00 PM EDST). The next term begins on July 25th and will cover the topic "Sex Magick in Full Form." There will be 8 formal classes and two chat classes, each lasting 1.5 hours. Interested parties should contact Saunier@AOL.com for sign-up details and access to the ML (Metaphysics Library). Richard Alan Miller may be reached at DrRam@AOL.com or at NORTHWEST BOTANICALS, INC. 2185 S.E. Portola Drive Grants Pass, OR 97526. Look for a review of his new book, The Modern Alchemist, in the next issue of Crash Collusion.]
