

did

pass my tests and get my degree, but it was a near thing.

You see in the NAVY I discovered a secret. I saw the stealth. No one in those days of the cold war could see the stealth and know it existed. So they needed a technician and had a problem. I would remember the stealth for the rest of my life? This meant that I had to 1 - Be terminated 2 - Have my memory erased

I didn't want to die, I was a loyal American boy. They couldn't just kill me. So the CIA destroyed my memory through operations, experimentation, radiation, and programming. The drugs weren't so good then, now who knows.

I liked the NAVY and I still am loyal. When you join the service and you see something you won't remember. It's part of the extent that intelligence forces will go to protect the national defense.

I didn't think the service should have followed me afterward. Now days I talk to voices knowing that these voices are either spirits or implants and on the otherside are controllers or aliens or worse!

I love people and try to help whenever I can. I haven't had much work for a long time and the controllers haunt me. The last job I had so much microwave energy was beamed at me my teeth hurt. The CIA have it in for me.

They made me into something called a programmed assassin. They used me against the Gambino crime family. I wasn't involved at the conscious level.

The military had their reasons. But the truth is they took advantage of a boy. I was wet behind the ears.

Oh sure I've seen aliens and UFO's I know their origins. I've been buzzed by loud helicopters. I know there is a war going on. The last time I was picked up by aliens they yelled at me. The first time they just showed me around the craft. They didn't have to experiment. Just prepare me so that when I entered the service in the future I would be a good zombie...

My testimony is this... UFO's are real the intelligence community will go to any length to protect the knowledge. Including harassment, experimentation, death, temporal displacement, dimensional displacement,

fake suicide, etc....Beware!
