

Presumed Materialization of Blood: Experiment with

M.D.

Abstract

A clinical psi experiment with paragnost [REDACTED] explores the development of presumed telekinesis, materialization of fresh blood stains on a Tibetan ceremonial dagger and associated psychic nexus events. The dissociated, trance-like state is a prerequisite and the chronology preceeding, during and after the major effects is described and related to psychodynamic factors. DNA analysis of the blood on the dagger is compared with the analysis of blood from Nuzum, his wife, and the author: the presumed materialized blood on the dagger was different from the others and unexplained. The possible application of this data to various medical states is mentioned and the method of study should be useful in attempting to understand the mechanisms of psi and its possible role in psychophysiology and experimental design.

Introduction

Attention has been directed to [REDACTED] (JN) [1-6], paragnost and 35 year-old martial arts instructor, and his extensive repertoire of psychic feats. Many of his psychic experiments which included telekinesis, matter through matter, apportionment, fire immunity, and levitation have been recorded on more than 159 videotapes. Also, since 1983 until the present, there have been 287 audiotaped telephonic interviews. These transcripts and protocols comprise more than 2,250 pages. This study will present a recent series of videographed experiments made in Nuzum's hometown. In particular, the apparent materialization of a hot, blood-soaked, triangular-bladed, ceremonial Tibetan dagger is documented. Although this presumed psychic event and associated nexus is rare, it did happen, and it might give reason for those who are interested in psychosomatics to ponder the applicability of this type data to more everyday, mundane situations which might occur occasionally in their practices as well as to open up for clinicians possible new vistas of neuroscience and theories of the mind. For unless psi is integrated into these schemes, the study is woefully incomplete and research horizons could be seriously restricted.

First Night: Apportionment of Blood-Soaked Dagger

On a field trip to JN's home the evening of October 6, 1995, JN attempted several psychic experiments which were videographed by two camcorders (my own Sony Video Hi 8 Handycam CCD-TRO1 and JN's wife's Magnavox VHS CVN310). For whatever reason, perhaps the distracting visiting of the two women who were present, JN's experiments were discontinued and he was frustrated and disappointed; however, although he did not realize it, at the time of his 'failure' to telekinetically unscrew a nut from a bolt which he had given up trying to accomplish, I had fortunately kept the Handycam focused close-up on the nut and the bolt. I subsequently recorded a spontaneous pivoting of the bolt and two to three turns of the nut [7]. This session was concluded and my wife and I returned to our motel. Later, just as I was ready to retire for the night at 11:59 p.m., the room's telephone rang and JN suggested that I come at once, meeting JN at JN's Martial Arts Studio. I hurriedly dressed and placed recording equipment into the vehicle and drove all over JN's part of town trying to find his studio on a dark, mostly moon-obscured, intermittently drizzling, rainy night. After circling several streets and ready to admit defeat, I suddenly was inspired to take a different turn and immediately saw JN standing outside on a building's balcony waving and yelling, "Hurry! Hurry!"

I found JN's large studio room which was originally lit with fluorescent ceiling fixtures attached

Figure 1: Twisted plastic lighter.

ALTERNATE PERCEPTIONS

Journal of UFOs, History, Native
Spirituality, & Paranormal
Phenomena; Issue #38, Spring 1997

Contributions on the line for in Washington. Judy will tell you about Lisa - an extraordinary lady & UFO / UAP expert who lives in nearby Waterville, CO (Sergeant's wife) to steel beams; now these lights were turned off, and the gain on the halogen lamp was turned up. The flat ceiling was an estimated 18 feet high. At the far end of the room JN had placed 12 votive candles on the floor circumferentially arranged according to the hours of a clock, with a diameter of approximately 10 feet. JN then approached his wife and myself and gave each of us heavy brass medallions with an engraving of Archangel Michael and an accompanying folder which stated: The Angel of the The Lord encamps around others who fear him. And he delivers them. (Psalm 34:7). JN told us to hold the medal while he retreated behind the circle of candles. He took two, glass candlesticks — one contained a tall, white candle and the other contained a tall, black candle. JN placed the candlesticks to his sides, in front of him — the black candle on his left, the white candle to his right — within the circle. He then placed his brass medal beside the white candle and took from his pocket a permanently sealed, red, transparent plastic reservoir lighter with a chromium top and attempted to manually light the candles. He appeared perplexed and disappointed,

Figure 2: Spontaneous combustion/apportation sequence.
(A) JN behind the circle of lit candles.

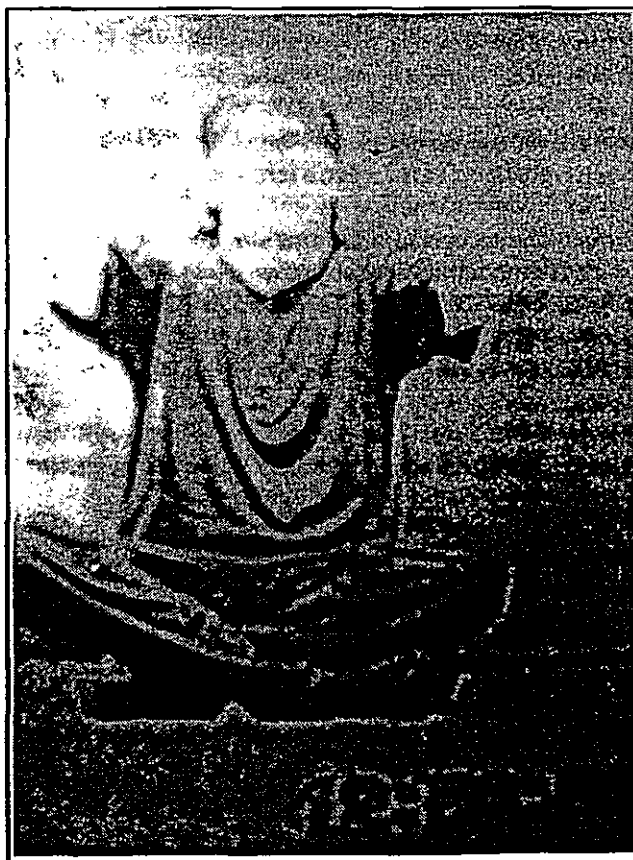

stating, "There was fluid in here earlier and it worked, now it's empty..."

I noted JN becoming entranced.

JN slowly took the lighter in his hands and twisted it approximately 180 degrees [Figure 1]. JN's wife intervened by giving JN some matches and he proceeded to manually light all the candles; then he situated himself in a lotus position close to the wall and outside the circle, behind the votive candle that was positioned at the hour 12. JN's wife activated audiocassette music and the now-entranced JN flexed his elbows and held his outstretched hands and fingers up toward the ceiling. In approximately two minutes, JN's hands began to tremble. All of a sudden there was a blinding illumination inside the entire room. JN's wife and I saw what looked like a sun several feet to JN's left in the ceiling accompanied with a whooshing sound. In the same instant something descended from the air and crashed to the floor in front of JN.

(2 B) supplicatory posture/entrancement.

(2 C) brilliant illumination.

Shortly afterward, JN roused from his trance.

I walked to the circle of candles and picked up a brass, Tibetan, triangular-bladed dagger [8] whose metal felt hot and appeared to have wet, fresh blood on the blade by appearance and smell. The tip of the dagger was dented approximately 2 degrees. After close-up videographing the dagger, I noted that the halogen lamp which was near JN's wife's camcorder and an estimated 30-40 feet from JN, was now bent in the middle of the shaft approximately 3-4 degrees; this lamp was also videographed. JN's wife videotaped the ceiling from where the fireball and dagger apparently originated; she then became very upset and importuned us to quickly leave the studio before arousing curiosity and trouble [Figure 2: A, B, C; Figure 3: A and B; Figure 4: A].

Third Night: Unfinished Business and Telekinesis

The second night of our stay had been notable for JN's demonstration of approximately 30 feats before a group of physicians and their families. These were recorded videographically with two camcorders.

(3 B) presumed apparition ceiling site.

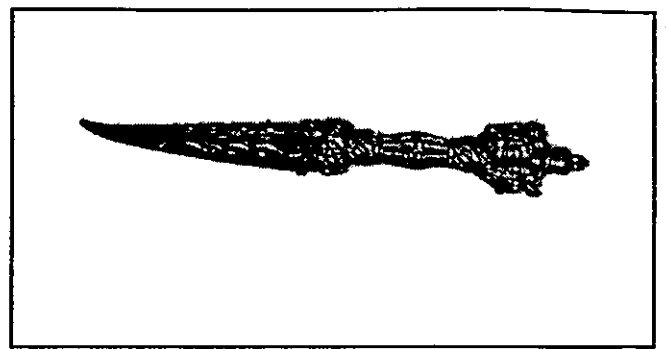

Figure 3: (A) Blood-stained, Tibetan, apparition dagger.

Then the third night began at JN's apartment and was videographed with the Hi 8 Handycam. Wearing a blue T-shirt and trousers, JN greeted us and then brought a lighter with an empty, clear plastic reservoir and sealed chromium top with a green, plastic bank covering the junction of the metal and the reservoir. JN asked for a quarter and I scratched my initials (BES) and the date onto the quarter. Within slightly more than 60 seconds of failing to teleport the quarter (during this time it rested on top of the lighter-reservoir in JN's left palm with the tip of JN's right index finger in apposition to it while he was entranced and music played in the background) JN dropped the coin, picked it up, and then slapped it against the reservoir with the instantaneous presumed teleportation of the coin to the inside of the lighter's fuel chamber.

This state of "numismatic incarceration" lasted approximately 65 seconds during which time JN repeatedly shook the clanking coin until, suddenly, the coin vacated the interior of the reservoir. JN immediately dropped both the coin and the lighter onto the table and attributed this 'deteleportation' to the inherent instability of this type of matter-through-matter experiment [9]. The interior of the lighter also now seemed to have several metallic particles inside, approximately 1 mm. in diameter. JN then compared the alleged teleported/materialized Tibetan, blood-stained (blade) dagger of two nights previous with a similar dagger which he owned. The halogen lamp was then inspected and revideographed — but now there was no bend, the two lamps were similar and straight.

In an elaborate ritual, JN now attached two, MASTER key locks and a chain to the materialized dagger while music played in the background; he was entranced and presumably telekinetically sealed the locks and telekinetically (?) influenced these so these could not be unlocked or detached from the dagger. JN quietly explained that this ritual was necessary to undo the destructive valence (murderous rage) attached to the dagger and make it mechanically difficult to use the weapon in a lethal manner, i.e. some innocent/suggestible person to pick it up and be 'overcome' by the 'influence.'

Figure 4: Bent shaft to halogen lamp (right, above camera).

At 11:00 p.m. after experimenting and interviewing, JN impulsively declared. "I need to go to the studio. You can come with me if you wish."

I took the Handycam, attaching a 30 minute battery.

When JN, his wife, and I entered the vehicle whose radio was set to the 'on' position from prior use, the radio was now playing funereal organ music so gloomy that JN's wife commented. I turned off the radio. Arriving at the studio, the flight of cement stairs was climbed to the landing where JN went into an immediate trance. There, he took his studio key from his pocket to open the heavy, metal door with the thick, half-glass top; as JN tried to insert his key into the lock, the key underwent a spontaneous 180 degree twist on the shaft and no one could enter the room [Figure 5].

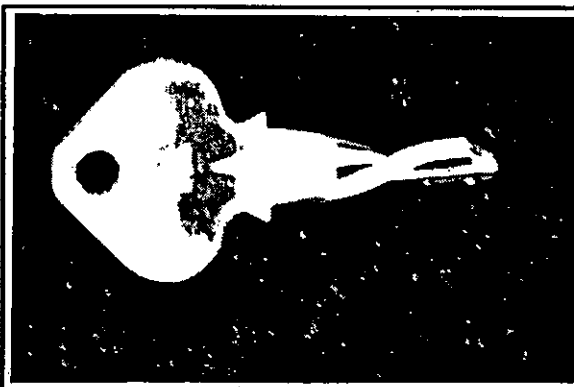

Figure 5: Spontaneously twisted studio key.

I began videotaping not knowing what to expect.

JN suddenly took out his Tibetan dagger (the same dagger that he showed me previously when he compared it to the apported specimen) from his right pant's pocket and thrust the point against his right nasolabial fold. JN breathed heavily repeatedly and shouted, "Do you see him sitting on the chair?"

I replied, "No, I don't see the person but I do see the fold-up, upright, wooden chair." The chair was approximately eight to nine feet inside the room from the door and visible due to the ceiling lights suddenly (spontaneously?) going on.

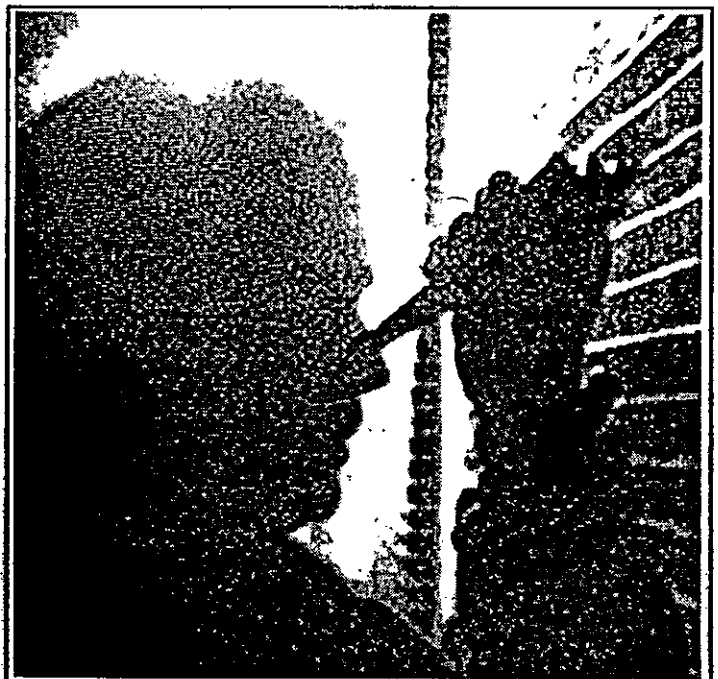

Figure 6: (A) Knife pressed to JN's right cheek.

(6 B) dagger thrust against door/phantom.

The tension of JN's muscles to his partially flexed, right, upper extremity which held the dagger against his face was extreme and I was fearful that JN might seriously injure himself — or worse, enter the orbit.

While still videotaping, I intervened, "God Jesus, help this good man! There will be no harm done to (JN). God protect him. He is goodness, all goodness."

With that, JN's trance-associated, clonic movements against his face with the dagger reversed to powerful thrusts of the dagger in his right hand against the thick glass door (toward the phantom in the chair).

Oddly, the studio lights went off and then on four times. When the lights were on, I could clearly see the folding chair which immediately collapsed [10] with a loud crash when the lights went out the fourth time [Figures 6A and B]. JN's wife, who was observing all this, exclaimed, "There's other chairs at the far end of the room...they also moved around and collapsed." She and JN confirmed this when they went to the studio the next day; they also noted a large hole in the ceiling with associated cracking and charring [Figure 8].

When JN, his wife, and I returned to their apartment, JN described his subjective experiences, the visual hallucination was of a "...middle-aged, white man with long, dark brown hair, wearing a T-shirt...and evil look. Looking right at me, and bent on killing me (JN). "That is, bent on killing JN until matters were precipitously reversed as described and JN symbolically killed, "...the phantom murderer who had just used the dagger to kill someone," JN said (killed with the dagger two nights prior during the apparent materialization of the dagger). Lex talionis.

In interviews it was clear that JN did not know what to exactly expect, and what would / did happen. JN reiterated that, "You see him. You see him. He seemed like you and me. I wondered why you (BES) didn't see him."

Later, JN commented, "I think that's why I think you will like The Shadow movie. After I stabbed him (phantom intruder) with the dagger, he fell back and dematerialized."

Videographic Results

Study of the two, videographed sections of the first night's experiment revealed for the Handycam: (1) the lighter twisted approximately 180 degrees; (2) sequential photographs made from the videotape showing the entranced JN sitting in lotus position with his hand turned upward behind the hour of 12, the circle of lighted votive candles with the two, tall candles in front of him to his sides (note the two pulses of light and the faint outline of the falling Tibetan dagger from the top of the television screen — photo — to the floor, total time from entrancement to the apported dagger was two minutes and four seconds); (3) close-up photograph of the apparent blood-soaked dagger blade with a bent tip; (4) the bent (approximately 3 degrees) halogen lamp stem; and (5) the ceiling fixture from the angle it was videotaped had no visible defect or charring. These Handycam effects were confirmed from wide-angle taping made with the Magnavox camcorder by JN's wife.

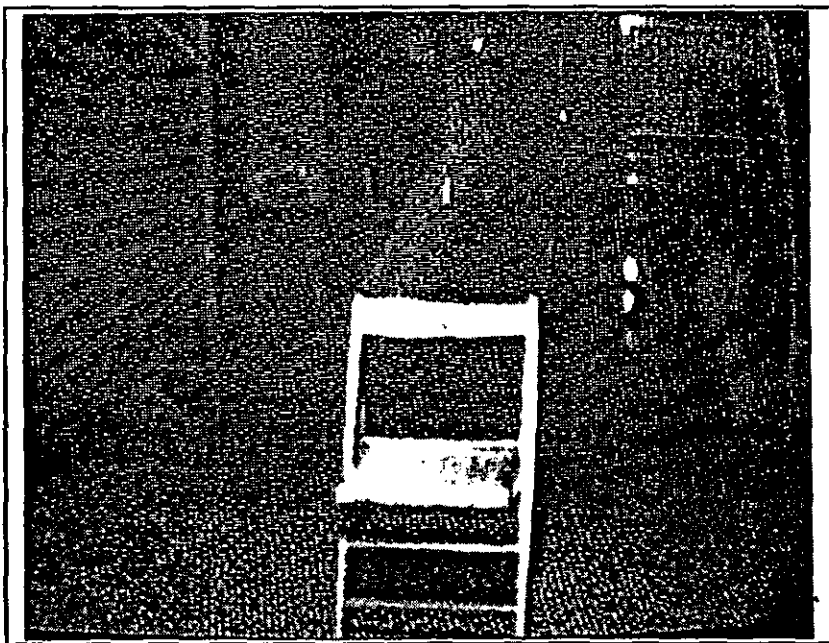

Figure 7: (A) Spontaneously lit studio with upright, wooden, folding chair.

The third night's developments that were videographed with the Handycam showed: (1) the spontaneously twisted 180 degrees key to the studio's metal door; (2) the entranced JN with the dagger thrusting against his right cheek; (3) violent plunges of the dagger against the glass partition to the metal door; and (4) the studio lights going off and on and the wooden chair in the upright position which subsequently collapsed when the lights were off.

Associated videographically recorded phenomena already described are: (1) suddenly pivoting bolt and untwisting nut; (2) chained and locked blood-soaked dagger; (3) teleported quarter into the sealed, plastic lighter reservoir; and (4) shortly afterward the empty lighter with flecks of apparent metal fragments (?) [Figures 9, A and B]. Also, later on JN's wife's videograph of the studio ceiling's purported site of the presumed apportation; this was askew from a perpendicular below JN by an estimated several feet. There was no indication of a previous ceiling hole or charring effect. How could the dagger trajectory have come from an angle and then appear on videotape to be perpendicular?

Crime Lab Analysis of Blood on the Dagger

The apparently apported dagger blade with presumed blood was never touched; the dagger was placed in a plastic bag and subsequently analyzed by Daniel C. Nippes, Chief Criminalist of the Regional Crime Laboratory, Fort Pierce, Florida. He concluded that the blood on the dagger was human. Nippes reported: "Under the microscope, the dagger looks like it was dipped into a specimen of blood, it's perfectly even as far as depth of penetration. Human bloodstains were identified on the dagger blade and on the exhibit number two paper towel. These stains were amplified by polymerase chain reaction, and typed for the following DNA loci, with the results as indicated:

Exhibit	DQA1	LDLR	GYP A	HBGG	D7S8	GC
#1-Dagger	1,1,1,2	AA	AA	AB	AB	BC
#2-Paper Towel	3,4	AB	AB	AA	BB	CC

Remarks:

The bloodstains on the two exhibits originated from different individuals. The hair from (JN) did not contain a root or follicular tissue. A root with follicular tissue is required for PCR DNA analysis.

(7 B) collapsed chair.

Subsequently obtained blood specimens from JN and JN's wife by Karen Cardiso, LPN, on January 25, 1996, and sent to BES, and blood specimens from BES, were analyzed by the Crime Laboratory. Daniel Nippes reported: "The blood standards were extracted, amplified by polymerase chain reaction, and typed for the following DNA loci, with the results as indicated:

Exhibit	DQA1	LDLR	GYP A	HBGG	D7S8	GC
#8-JN's Wife	1,1,4,1	AA	AA	AB	AB	BB
#9-JN	3,4	AB	AB	AA	BB	CC
#10-BES	1,3,3	AB	BB	AA	AB	AB

Remarks:

Previous examinations identified human bloodstains on a dagger and a paper towel, with a PCR DNA profile subsequently established. The bloodstains on the dagger did not originate from (JN's wife), (JN), or (BES). The bloodstains on the paper towel contained the same profile as (JN).

Discussion

For reasons already expressed [1-6] about the validity and integrity of JN's psi experiments, there are no readily acceptable explanations such as malobservation or fraud. Rather than delving into a litany of tortured Rube Goldberg-like possibilities (which can sometimes strain one's credulity more than the psi hypothesis), one might better ponder what happened and where did the dagger and the blood come from? How did the dagger and the blood materialize? What is the connection between the fireball, ceiling site, and the videographically recorded perpendicular dagger trajectory path which was more than 10 feet, estimated circumference of the the circle of the lit candles, lateral and anterior to JN? Are the two separate events related to the fire/energy/materialization hypothesis? What might the mechanism(s) be in relation to other analogous materializations/apportations with JN? For example, the time that JN heated two lumps of glass to white-hot heat with a blowtorch and then, when entranced, he passed these across his face and closed eyes — these then absolutely vanished [Research videotape #149, May 1, 1995). As in other instances, there was no indication of any acute thermal injury to JN's eyes, hands, or other parts of his body.

Figure 8: Hole in ceiling.

In the dagger experiment, it might be wondered if there was a connection with the sudden and surprising absence of lighter fluid, and the episode of apparent spontaneous combustion [4]. The twin-pulsed brilliance of the light as videographed and experienced would also suggest a tremendous expenditure of energy. The physicist hopefully can analyze this and make calculations and inferences.

Needless to say, JN had been preparing for this experiment for a long time and he was in a hyperattentive-entrancement. The relationship between his mental content and ability to 'focus' the hypothesized energy and presumably altered physiology can be speculated on. It is of interest that he did not know until the ultimate moment that what was going to happen might happen, and that he would include myself (BES) in his experiment. The implicit dangers and stresses might have been surmounted by the success of the experiment as symbolically portrayed by the protection afforded by the circle of lit candles and the Archangel Michael brass medal, one of which was placed by the white ('good') candle.

As in numerous other feats, the accompanying psychodynamic constellations are complex and difficult to boil down to words. However, the symbolic richness of the data, elaborate preparations and rituals, automatisms and entrancement, the paradoxes and apparent projection to physical psi acting out (Materialization? Spontaneous combustion? Telekinesis?) is analogous to psychophysiological literary material presented in several of Donald Morse's erudite articles [12-14]. It might be conjectured how JN would express if he was immersed over a period of time in a medical milieu where he would be in rapport with biological/psychosomatic constructs and might be motivated to create and apply his talents in these directions as he has, by analogy, done or had happen with metal objects in experiments/experiences that are in harmony with his past encounters as a foundry worker. What fundamental molecular differences might there be between melding metal objects, human skin, or paper and in attempting to repair ('heal') broken bones? Between his matter-through-matter experiments with coins teleporting into closed spaces or linking metal rings and possibly affecting tissue cultures of beta cells or teleporting healthy beta cells into animals rendered surgically or chemically diabetic? Far fetched, perhaps, but in view of JN's inscrutable abilities it would be reprehensible to overlook or fail to attempt, after suitable safeguards, controls and the critical entrancement/rapport/programming of these basic psychic-dynamic/psychosomatic experiments. What good is the psi hypothesis unless it is tested in verisimilitude!

The psychic nexus is a continuum that is intricately interwoven with suggestion and myriad other influences. For example, during my stay with JN he presented me with a commercial videotape, The Shadow, which featured a Tibetan dagger, scenes which were suggestive of the life and death struggle/conflict drama acted out by the entranced JN. JN was unaware of the possible connection between these two factors but he recalled how several years earlier in our relationship, I had once introduced JN on the telephone to Walter Gibson [15], author of The Shadow and many classic books on magic, magicians, and psychical phenomena. Unfortunately, Mr. Gibson died before JN could meet him in person and demonstrate some feats, yet JN always respected and acknowledged my friendship for Walter and in particular also for Joseph Dunniger, who was a lifelong friend of Mr. Gibson and the one who introduced me to Mr. Gibson. The bonds and sinews of rapport and to psychic nexus are often deep and have many layers over time and space.

• • • • •

I have personally been aware of the affinity by many gifted psychics for old or simulated ancient objects d'art. Although one would be reluctant to concur anything with this, an impression lingers that some valence is attached to certain objects of deep personal/mythological/religious significance which can be related to the art of successful psychometry (suggestion to expansion into full-blown psi), talismans, superstitious, and religious relics. The metaphysiology of 'belief,' 'confidence,' and 'rapport' begs study. From the infant child who transfers his attachments (love, dependency, survival needs) from the breast to the blanket, rag doll and so forth, to collections of various items, to building business empires, perhaps the core to the acquisitiveness is similar in roots. Anything that threatens these attachments, actual or symbolic, can cause disruptions in homeostasis, induce psychological stress (anxiety), and contribute to psychosomatic disorders. Conversely, alleviation of these forces (misdirected energies) can be therapeutic. Study of the paranormal and gifted paragnosts could have an earthquake effect on our understanding of suggestion, hypnosis, ASC, trance, dissociation, and psychosomatic effects [16]. No theory of the mind or mental function can be considered complete without taking psi into account.

References and Notes

1. Schwarz, B. E.: "Presumed Physical Mediumship of UFOs," Flying Saucer Review, Vol. 31, No. 6, 1986, pp. 18-22.
2. Schwarz, B. E.: "Follow-up Notes on Psychiatric and Paranormal Aspects of Ufology," Pursuit, accepted for publication, 1989.

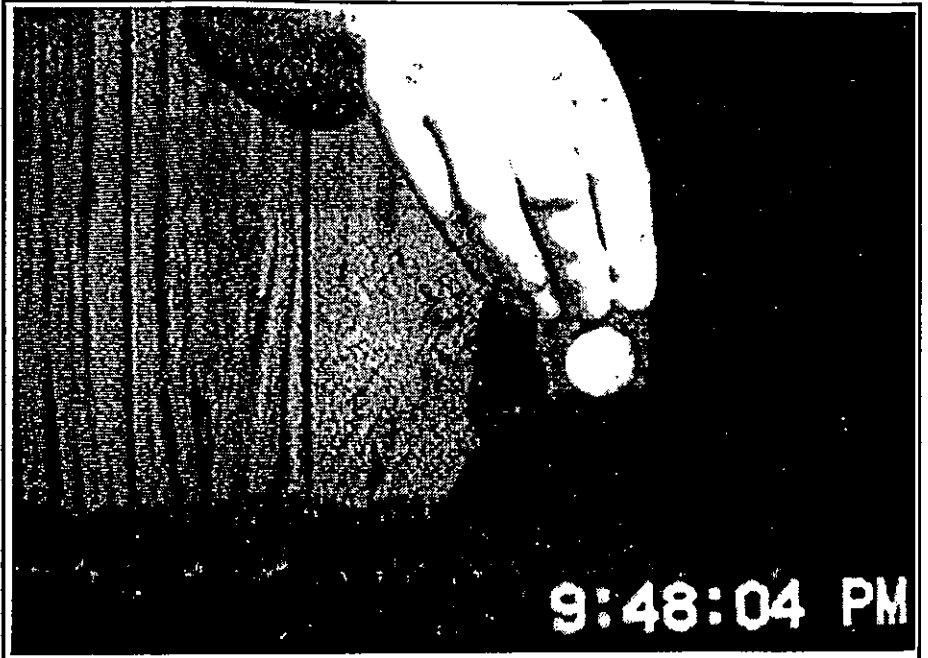

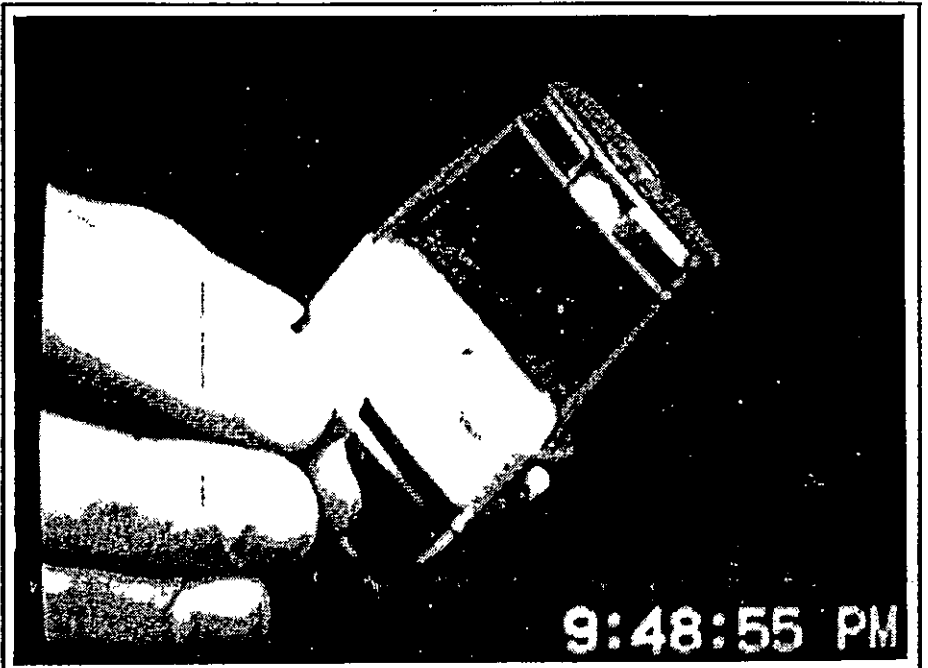

Figure 9: (A) Teleported quarter into plastic lighter reservoir.

(9 B) seconds later.

3. Schwarz, B. E.: "Joe A. Nuzum's Possible Levitations," Pursuit, accepted for publication, 1991.
4. Schwarz, B. E.: "Observations on Presumed Psi-induced Spontaneous Combustion with Joe A. Nuzum, Paragnost," Journal of Fortean Research Center, Special Issue May, 1995, pp. 1-32.
5. Schwarz, B. E.: "Presumed Paranormal Linkage of Rings, Part I: Human Aortic Rings - SORRAT; Part II: Paranormally Linked rings, Rubber Bands and Brass Nut," International Journal of Psychosomatics, Vol. 41, No. 1-4, 1994, pp. 95-99.
6. Schwarz, B. E.: "Presumed Case of Telekinesis," International Journal of Psychosomatics, Vol. 32, No. 1, 1985.

pp. 3-21.

7. See Research Videotape No. 120, January 31, 1991, for twice telekinetically unscrewing a nut from a bolt which is beneath an overturned glass.

8. Although it was not possible to weigh the apported dagger beforehand, the dagger was found to weigh 550 Grams with the later attached, sealed locks and chain; under the circumstances of the experiment, such a heavy weapon could be an exceedingly dangerous missile.

9. For variegated matter-through-matter videographed experiments, see Research Tapes, No.'s 82, 87, 92, 93, 99, 105, 112, 114, 115, 116, 118, 119, 123, 125, 126, 128, and 137.

10. Since this episode of the metal chair collapsing, JN has been able to 'control' this telekinetic action and has incorporated it into some of his performances, including once in the psychic nexus a humorous unanticipated collapse of a fold-up chair next to a woman in the audience who was involved with some of the experiments and who was giving JN a difficult time.

11. It should be noted that previously (January 4, 1993) JN had sent me some presumed telekinetic specimens and unbeknown to JN, one of the specimens that was wrapped in a paper towel was stained with blood; this was the paper towel specimen submitted for DNA analysis. Dan Nippes stated that for the blood on the dagger, there was a chance of 1:3800 that the blood was of Hispanic origin, and 1:7000 that it was of Caucasian origin. The third specimen of blood was obtained in my laboratory on January 29, 1995, after videographically interviewing JN and going over past feats. In this discussion, I mentioned once seeing Sister Susan (Syrian Catholic from India) in Irvington, New Jersey, who had stigmata every Friday for years since her first experience on a Good Friday years before. Shortly afterward, at 4:34 p.m., JN's wife brought to my attention, very upset, stating that profuse blood was dripping from JN's left index finger. I immediately examined JN's finger and could find no reason for the bleeding. JN's bleeding finger was wiped with a wet towel which, unfortunately hemolysed the blood so it was not suitable for later DNA analysis; however, as expected, this paper towel gave a positive phenolphthalein test for blood. Research videotapes by JN's wife pertaining to experiments with blood include: No. 67, near instantaneous healing of a razor cut and bleeding; No. 118, October 27, 1993, a razor cut with bleeding with rapid healing with no subsequent trace of blood — but the immediate, near simultaneous discoloration of a clear wine glass filled with water (into blood?) and No. 144, January 26, 1995, recorded by me with the Handycam in my laboratory, the telekinetic forming of the letter 'C' from a puddle of virgin blood — the 'C' corresponded to JN's apprehension of the initials 'CC' which were correct. JN had told an inductee that although the initials were 'CC', the same as those of her niece, Cindy Crawford (the actress), these belonged to another person of the same initials, which was also correct. JN knew of the aunt/niece relationship but was not fooled by spurious conscious/memory logic. Later, when with the aunt/inductee, JN phonetically approximated the telepathically perceived surname.

12. Morse, Donald R.; Martin, John; Moshonov, Joshua: "Stress Induced Sudden Cardiac Death: Can It Be Prevented?" Stress Medicine, Vol. 8, 1992, pp. 35-46.

13. Morse, Donald R.; Martin, John; Moshonov, Joshua: "Psychosomatically Induced Death — Relative to Stress, Hypnosis, Mind Control, and Voodoo: Review and Possible Mechanisms", Stress Medicine, Vol. 7, 1991, pp. 213-232.

14. Morse, Donald R.: "The Stressful Kiss: A Biopsychosocial Evaluation of the Origins, Evolution, and Societal Significance of Vampirism," Stress Medicine, Vol. 9, 1993, pp. 181-199.

15. The Shadow, Universal City Studios, Inc., and Bregman/Baer Productions, Inc., VHS HiFi Stereo Surround 82007, ISBN 0-7832-1173-2, color, 1 hour 48 minutes, © 1994.

16. About the psychic nexus pertaining to most of these experiments, Walter B. Gibson told me that in one year during the depression he wrote more published words, second only to The Bible. Throughout his long and prolific life, he exerted his keen intelligence and prodigious energies in writing numerous books about his friends, the most famous magicians of his time. Once he told me about a famous English murder case at the turn of the century. Oddly, or through synchronicity, I had just heard about the same case first-hand from my next-door neighbor, Dick Stoney, whose family was associated with the murdered, famous Shakespearean actor, William Terriss, and which event and connections are described in a book about Mr. Stoney's family and written by his cousin (see Holloway, David: Playing the Empire, the Acts of the Holloway Touring Theater Company, Harrap, London, 1979, p. 80) Mr. Gibson, who began his career as a crime reporter for a Philadelphia newspaper, was amazed that at a lawn party when he had recently been talking about the famous, forgotten case of long ago, his waiter introduced himself as the murdered man's son who then completed the story! Also, another time while at a party, Mrs. Litzka Gibson who was formerly a well-known performer and once married to a magician, the Great Raymond, and who had a life-long interest in psi, when in Hollywood years before she was a friend of Cheiro (Count Hammond), the leading psychic palmist of his times. Mrs. Gibson also had a skill for palmistry and told me when reading palms for a charitable gathering, she once took the palm of an earnest, young man and inwardly recoiled in horror since she "...knew that he would soon be killed, murdered." At the time of this reading she did not know that she had just met Bobby Kennedy! Some of Gibson's other books are - Gibson, Walter B.; Witchcraft, Grosset and Dunlap, New York, 1973; Dunninger as Told to Walter Gibson: Dunninger's Secrets, Lyle Stuart, Inc., 120 Enterprise Avenue, Secaucus, New York 17094, 1974; Gibson, Walter B. and Gibson, Litzka, R.: The Mystic and Occult Arts, Parker Publishing Company, Inc., West Nyack, New York, 1969.

17. The fluctuating trancelike states, like the borderlands between suggestion to deep-trance hypnosis, beyond the semantic differences, are analogous to the thin, dividing line between illusion and reality. For example, in Research Tape No. 148 (March 18, 1995, 12:11 a.m.) JN placed a quarter on the table and positioned a mirror's edge at an acute angle on the middle of the coin. As JN reduced the angle of the mirror on the coin, the illusion was created of the coin bending. However, when JN removed the quarter, the coin was in fact bent like a taco.

D [REDACTED] may be contacted at:

[REDACTED]
[REDACTED]