First, you wasted your postage writing to the NARA for photos! They know not what they have since taking over the AF collection and do not care. The NASM folks had them for a time, sorted and IDed most and put them on laserdisc which is how I used them at the AFM when I worked there. I was really familiar with the Wright Field shots and none were of Hanger 4. I know of shots in the AFM collection with 4 in background and will see if I can retrieve them as that is the best that can be done. I also sorted out the prints in the ASC history office last year and there weren't any Hanger 4 shots there either, except the under construction from the air views which will be worthless.

I jogged past 4 for 3 1/2 years while in AF. Went to work at AFM in spring 1978 and jogged past it for a few more years. We used to scrounge tools from them. If and when that hanger door was open, there were people there to make sure not even we museum troops could get in, period. We had to use the back doors! Wright's runway could not be used period for night operations and how in hell could this thing be landed there in daylight with a mini mall along the main runway? It was not trucked in unless knocked down into pieces and what good is that.

[REDACTED], if you want to believe this chap, go for it. I am not going over all what we talked about last year about MacDill, etc. I do know that classified a/c are not put intact in semi-public salvage yards at any base period and that star wearing division commanders are not risking said stars briefing an uncleared civilian about something just declassified with an armed AP standing there.

My blood pressure is up again, so will send this. I am looking forward to July PM! cheers, [REDACTED]
