

Subj: Fwd: Re: New Breakthrough Overunity Device Announced
Date: 10/08/2000 12:34:43 PM Eastern Daylight Time
From: [REDACTED]
To: [REDACTED] (Steven M. Greer M.D.)

>Delivered-To: [REDACTED]
>Date: Sat, 7 Oct 2000 14:07:40 -0700 (PDT)
>From: SKIPPER FROM THE SEA <[REDACTED]>
>Subject: Re: New Breakthrough Overunity Device Announced
>To: [REDACTED]

>Dear [REDACTED]
>Thanks for the input. Our planet just took its first >step toward solving some of mankind's problems.
>Beardens 5 to 1 systems looks great easy to use and >maintenance free.

>
>This device taps the basic wind of ether guess what >will be next. How about getting power from a high >speed vortex of ether.

>
>I'm currently building a hv pulsed motor that runs for >free.

>Best wishes,

>Capt. [REDACTED] wrote:

>> A scientific team headed by [REDACTED] >> announced yesterday that they >> have developed and tested a new Overunity device >> that produces a >> Coefficient of Performance of 5.

>>
>> This means that it puts out five times as much power
>> as is fed into it,
>> making up the difference by extracting free energy
>> from the >> vacuum. Essentially it can be considered as a >> battery that never runs down.

>>
>> Later models of this breakthrough device are >> expected to produce COP's in >> the region of 30.

>>
>> The device is known as a Motionless Electromagnetic >> Generator, has no
>> moving parts, and is based on magnetic principles >> that were only able to be >> utilized when Honeywell produced a new >> nanocrystalline material which >> became available last year.

>>
>> A paper containing full details and diagrams about >> the device can be >> downloaded from the CSETI Website under What's New >> (1.3Mb)