Dear [REDACTED]:

Please find enclosed the copy I promised of Major Keyhoe's account of your sighting. I really appreciate your willingness to annotate this for us, because it will enable us to put together a proper file on the case. I am including a self-addressed return envelope for your convenience in sending the material back to us. When you make the annotations, please change everything that is inaccurate, no matter small the detail may be. We like to have our data as exact as we can get it.

You will be interested to know that something very funny (and lucky) happened last night, quite by chance. Dr. James McDonald of the University of Arizona (whom I believe I mentioned to you) was in town for a scientific meeting, and we had supper together. During the conversation, he mentioned a man he had met not so long ago in San Diego who reported seeing something over the Atlantic in early 1951. He did not tell me the man's name, but when we began to discuss the report, I realized he had to be talking about your experience. The details of the two reports match in every respect (except the man could not remember the exact date). I told Dr. McDonald of my talk with you, and of your intention to get the names of some of the other crew members. Needless to say, we are now very interested to see if we can get additional information from this other man as well as yourself, and then hopefully track down more of the witnesses. It would be especially interesting, for example, to find that Navy doctor and get his recollections.

In looking over my notes, I find I was never able to write down the information from your log book. Would it be possible for you to make a copy of those pages and include it with the other material you are going to send me? It would really be helpful if you could.

I will be sure to let you know how our work on your case progresses. You and Mrs. Bethune were very kind to spend so much time with me, and I do appreciate it. After I left you, I continued on to New York to keep another business appointment, and the trip went very well. The view of the New York area from Telegraph Hill is spectacular at night.

Thank you again for your hospitality.

P.S. Also enclosed are two report forms for you and Mrs. Bethune to describe your sighting in Detroit.
