In 1999, Rumsfeld reported on the feasibility of a national missile defense system from a commission that he headed, which the Senate and Congress ended up supporting, based on intelligence reports (same source as Iraq's WMD??) though President Clinton had long been opposed to it, as per CNN:

"The threat to the U.S. posed by these emerging capabilities is broader, more mature, and evolving more rapidly than has been reported in estimates by the intelligence community," the commission under Rumsfeld's leadership concluded... In his campaign, Bush repeatedly said the nation's military readiness had deteriorated during the eight years of the Clinton presidency. "Donald Rumsfeld, President-elect Bush's nominee for secretary of defense, is a leading proponent not only of national missile defenses, but also of U.S. efforts to take control of outer space by developing technology to attack and defend satellites in orbit. Together, these initiatives could bring a dramatic militarization of space over the next two decades, a prospect that some defense experts have long urged and others have passionately condemned. The Pentagon is using national missile defense "as a wedge to accelerate our activities in space," charged Bruce Blair, head of the nonprofit Center for Defense Information. Secretary Rumsfeld resigns after Kay report, citing pledge to grandson

By Fred Branfman

October 4, 2003 | Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld resigned today, in the wake of a report by weapons inspector David Kay stating that the U.S. had found no evidence of weapons of mass destruction in Iraq. The report, Rumsfeld said, "humiliated me by showing to the world that I have no regard whatsoever for the truth." To the stunned amazement of reporters at a press conference, Mr. Rumsfeld added that he had been lying consistently to the public since taking office..."
