Mark,

Sen. [REDACTED] visited the newsroom Thursday during his summer tour of Nevada for a sit-down interview with our, heh-heh, editorial board. As you know, he is a key player in the whole UFO field because he sits on the Senate Intelligence Committee.

Anyhow, our interview went fine, mostly about the president's visit to Lake Tahoe, Internet gaming and the balanced budget, but as usual I accompanied him out to his car to spring the UFO questions.

I asked him if he had yet formed an opinion of Col. Philip Corso's bombshell of a book, and briefly recounted to him about Corso's time on the National Security Council and head of the Army's Foreign Technology Office. Bryan said he didn't quite know what to think. He reiterated that when he had been shown Area 51, he had not been shown anything like that.

So I pressed on, saying that Corso, who was proven right about American POWs in North Korea being transferred to the Soviet Union, could be blowing the whistle on another scandal, suggesting that Bryan had not been briefed on EVERYTHING. My last question to him was, "Don't you think that the time has come for Congressional hearings to find out what the real truth is?"

For the first time, he hinted that he may be leaning in that direction. He said: "Perhaps the time is coming for that."

Not much, but that's a big change from his former, completely non-committal and skeptical statements.

Afterward, I got the bright idea to follow up with a letter, mentioning another fact or two about Corso that should impress him, including the fact that Corso worked as an aide to Strom Thurmond after his military service. You know, one congressman to another. And also, I think I will recommend he contact Barry Goldwater for a conversation, and include a copy of Goldwater's famous letter expressing frustration at being denied access to the alleged UFO artifacts room at Wright-Patterson. The reason I think that would be helpful is that, as you are undoubtedly familiar with, Goldwater was the CHAIRMAN of the Senate Intelligence Committee when he was rebuffed by his old buddy and told not to ask again. Perhaps that will persuade Bryan that he may have been considered too "civilian" to risk with the nation's highest secret, despite his exalted position. Worth a try, and Goldwater won't be around for a lot longer.

Lastly, I did mention to him that Steven Greer and Shari of the Starlight Coalition both now have exotic cancers, calling it troubling, but not spelling out the implication. He had no response except to say it was unfortunate. It's a lot of expect a U.S. senator to believe that intelligence agencies might be trying to kill them, and an accusation I have trouble with as well.

Anyhow, thought you'd want to know about this latest encounter with ~~XXXX~~ I am taking off for a three-day, two-night hike in the Desolation Wilderness, and will be back on Sunday. Talk to you later. Pat.
