>[REDACTED] asked her Majestys Government: >Whether they recognise any definitions of the terms of airspace, >outer space, deep space and interstellar space; whether >they will detail such definitions; and whether these are the same >definitions as used by the United States Government.
>[HL3311]

>The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Department of Trade >and Industry ([REDACTED] of Turville): >HMG recognise and use the term airspace. The principal of >airspace sovereignty is defined in the Chicago Convention on >International Civil Aviation (1944), which states that a country >has complete and exclusive sovereignty over the airspace above >its territory, including its territorial sea. This airspace starts >immediately above the surface of the earth.

>There is no internationally agreed definition of where outer >space starts. The most commonly used boundary between >airspace and outer space is functional. This means, for instance, >that the launching of satellites or other space objects is deemed >to be an outer space activity and that the flight of aircraft is >considered to be an activity in airspace. The use of outer space >is governed by the United Nations Treaty on Principles Governing >the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, >including the Moon and other Celestial Bodies (known as the Outer >Space Treaty, (1967) which covers all activity beyond sovereign >airspace. Both the UK and the US have ratified the Outer Space >Treaty and UK legislation regulating such activity (the Outer Space >Act 1986) is based on its principles.

>Deep space and interstellar space are terms sometimes used >by space scientists and astronomers. Deep space is a phrase >often used to describe space missions to other planets, beyond the >combined gravitational field of the earth and moon. Interstellar >space is not commonly used but could, for example, denote the >space between stars within a galaxy.

>Tracking Facility

>I [REDACTED]: asked Her Majestys Government: >Whether the deep space tracking facility at RAF Feltwell has a >role in tracking or searching for satellites, space debris, ballistic >missiles and space probes.

>[HL3312]

>Lord Gilbert: RAF Feltwell is responsible for searching for
