Steve & [REDACTED]

I wanted to bring you both up to date on the verification process regarding [REDACTED]

We have thoroughly verified [REDACTED] White House Army Signaling Agency credentials as a Specialist 4 (rank of Sergeant) with the ID# [REDACTED] using the main military personnel database processing center that I believe located in St. Louis, according to the military researcher that I use for this sort of thing.

What remains in doubt, however, is Lovekin's credentials as a "Brigadier General (BG)." The documents on the Disclosure website with regard to "United States Service Command," where Lovekin is referred to as a BG are not US Government Military documents. Moreover, the "United States Service Command" is not a legitimate US Government Military designation. This group that calls themselves the "United States Service Command" is a religious based organization formed to help people in disaster situations. Their main office is in Chicago at a church. I would be curious to know if [REDACTED] secretary, Sandy, was actually going to a ceremony where Lovekin might have been given as designation as a BG within this group, which is NOT a bona fide US Military promotion.

Furthermore, we have been unable to locate any "70th Regiment" in the National Guard in North Carolina (there is a 70th Regiment in Maryland), nor is there any verification, so far, of Lovekin being listed in the North Carolina National Guard, as well as South Carolina, or Georgia. We are still checking in Illinois, as well as waiting for other additional material that will, I am told, cover all the bases in this verification process.

I will get back to you when all the research at this end has been completed, but my military researcher, who recently won a Peabody Award for his work in researching the Abu Ghraib prison scandal, is doubtful that [REDACTED] attained the rank of BG in any legitimate US Military Service. However, I will keep my fingers crossed.

Peter
