SECRET MIND-CONTROL EXPERIMENTS AT SAN QUENTIN

A REAL-LIFE DRAMA WITH NOTORIOUS CHARACTERS, HIGH TECHNOLOGY AND GLOBAL IMPLICATIONS

by [REDACTED] as told to [REDACTED]

From military officers to prison inmates, the ranks of ordinary Americans who claim to have been the unwilling subjects of mind-control research continue to grow.

In a mind-control-victims' support group, prelaw student [REDACTED] met former San Quentin inmate [REDACTED] who had an incredible story to tell—incredible, that is, had [REDACTED] not had similar experiences. While she does not excuse the violent crime for which her recent associate was imprisoned in 1957, neither can she condone the use of unwilling prisoners in this or any other type of experimentation. To his story, she has added much ancillary documentation indicating that his experience was in no way unique.

In Germany, they came first for the Communists, and I didn't speak up because I wasn't a Communist. Then they came for the Jews, and I didn't speak up because I wasn't a Jew. Then they came for the trade unionists, and I didn't speak up because I wasn't a trade unionist. Then they came for the Catholics, and I didn't speak up because I was a Protestant. Then they came for me, and by that time no one was left to speak up.

I was a victim of psychological behavior-modification experimentation because of my political beliefs.<sup>2</sup> I want people to know about my experience so that they may realize that the U.S. government is developing mind-control technology using U.S. citizens without their consent. It is hiding its rights abuses with the National Security Act.

The experiments I was involved in took place at San Quentin starting in 1967, after I had been in the prison system for 10 years. They lasted 17 months, ran 24 hours a day nonstop and used a sound projection that simulated environments. I was tested psychologically, and the experiment was designed to study my fears, weaknesses and reactions in order to develop a means to control people.

<sup>2</sup>Although [REDACTED] was not imprisoned for his political views, apparently they led directly to the mind-control which he alleges began after he had been incarcerated 10 years. By that time, he had developed social relationships with various prison officials that led to their learning his political attitudes. (See p. ____.) Despite his having committed a violent crime, we must not write off the invasion of rights which he alleges with a careless "he deserved it" or "it was for the good of society"; every convict retains the fundamental human right to informed consent before receiving any type of treatment. If the prison officials involved indeed violated [REDACTED] rights, especially with so pernicious and invasive a "therapy" as he describes, were they not as guilty of criminal violence as he himself?—Ed.

This may be hard to believe, but a good comparison would be the Tuskegee syphilis experiments on black men that the National Institute of Health funded until the 1970s.<sup>3</sup> The subjects were not given a cure although one was available. In my case, the unethical experiments were performed not my on body, but my mind.

How The Magnetic Integrated Neuron Duplicator ("M.I.N.D. DEVICE") WORKS

One victim<sup>4</sup> has filed a suit alleging "remote neural monitoring and electronic brain-link technology." The theory behind this technology is that the brain emits electromagnetic energy which can be detected and analyzed as an electroencephalograph (EEG) does. Computers can correlate behavior and speech to the brain-wave signals, permitting thoughts to be remotely deciphered.

This theory works in reverse also. Stimulating and controlling behavior, the brain communicates via electromagnetic signals, and certain frequencies create and correspond with specific mood states and behavior. The brain cannot distinguish a foreign signal from its own. By targeting the subconscious mind with messages, as hypnotists do; the remote operator can target the subconscious, making this technology a very potent mind-control weapon.

This is a simple explanation of complex technology but, since President Bush proclaimed the 1990s "the Decade of the Brain,"<sup>5</sup> it is well within the realm of reality. One of the best books on this topic is Gary Selden and Dr. Robert Becker's The Body Electric:

Electromagnetism and The Foundation of Life.<sup>6</sup>

"Mind Control To Major Tom"

Using mind-control technology, the experimenters knew what I was thinking and feeling. I filed a court case in 1968, stating, "[A] brain device at San Quentin is being used upon him to alter or destroy his brain" and "the machine emitted electromagnetic waves which stimulated petitioner's brain."

They could communicate directly with my mind. At one point, they kept me awake for 27 days and nights. Dr. David Schmidt, chief psychiatrist at San Quentin, later told me that they had used a M.I.N.D. device on General Erwin Walker as they did on me. (Walker was the target of a missed gunshot by Lee Harvey Oswald at the time of the JFK murder.<sup>7</sup> Like me, he was known for his strong political opinions.)

I think that the goal of the behavior experiments performed on us was to develop the computer-brain technology for political purposes and as an intelligence tool. Using Pavlovian<sup>8</sup> conditioning with negative psychological stimulus, manipulators can change your behavior.

For example, they verbally attacked my conservative political views all day long for days on end. They would praise all of the Marxists around me, such as the world-famous leader of the Soledad Brothers, George Jackson, who was in a nearby cell. As in brainwashing, they tried to change my values.

A Canadian court case,<sup>9</sup> Orlikow v. U.S., describes brainwashing and details a history of mind-control experimentation by the CIA. In these experiments, which have relevant similarities to my own experience, a radio telemetry laboratory was used. Journey Into Madness, which chronicles the Orlikow case, states, "It was managed by Mr. Rubenstein who stated that he would create the electronic equipment to be used on patients that 'would enter the deepest corners of their minds.' He told his coworkers that he would also provide the groundwork for a system that could be used to monitor human activity at a point remote from the subject under study."<sup>10</sup>

At about the time that I was experimented on, my mother—who never lost faith in me—saw an episode of the CBS television show The 21st Century called "Miracle of the Mind." It described experiments around the country, stating that research was being directed toward controlling the mind, for example by implanting animals with electrodes and manipulating their behavior. Scientist David Krech warned about ominous abuses of the technology that could occur.

An Issue of "National Security"

Since mind-control techniques are still classified, I have absolutely no remedy under the law. Evidence of the highly confidential status of this electromagnetic technology can be found in such articles as "The Development of New Antipersonnel Weapons" by Louise Doswald-Beck and Gerald C. Caudey in The International Review of the Red Cross<sup>11</sup> which states:

In spite of the rarity of publications on this subject, and the fact that it is usually strictly classified information, research undertaken in this field seems to have demonstrated that very small amounts of electromagnetic radiation could appreciably alter the functions of living cells. . . . Some research seems to have confirmed that low-level electromagnetic fields, modulated to be similar to normal brain waves, could seriously affect brain function. [Emphasis added.]

Mind-control research may have begun in the 1950s and evolved into a full-fledged competition between the two super powers, much like the nuclear-arms race. Several independent sources support this claim. Two examples: The CIA's Stargate<sup>12</sup> report describes both the Russian interest in psychic research for military purposes and the United States' subsequent programs of psychic research. An article in Chemical and Engineering News describes a Hong Kong professor's suit against the U.S. government.<sup>13</sup> His case "names the

A Problem of Credibility: How Do You Discuss Mind-Control Experimentation Before It is Public Knowledge?

When I tried to commit suicide, the experiment changed as suddenly as it had begun, as though its goal had been met. Apparently looking for my breaking point, the mind-benders found it. Their fear tactics temporarily changed my anti-Zionist views to Marxism, and I wrote to the East German government for asylum. I still have its reply.

The overt, aggressive forms stopped, but the experimenters continued to monitor my actions to see what other changes might result. Since then, I have told everyone I meet about the M.I.N.D. device. I even filed a complaint with the FBI who interviewed me for about an hour. That yielded me no benefit, however, nor did the Freedom of Information Act request I filed.

It has been incredibly difficult for me to convince other people that scientists would attempt to conquer the mind, despite the nuclear arms race, genetic engineering, nanosecond computers, Star Wars satellites and other advanced technology. Since the United States and other governments are known to have developed the deadliest toxins and germ warfare,<sup>14</sup> why would they shy away from exploiting the mind?

Now, other prisoners are describing experiences similar to mine. There are also many articles supporting the reality of the M.I.N.D. device. On March 20, 1976, the Los Angeles Times carried one entitled "Mind-Reading Machine Tells Secrets of the Brain." Reporter Norman Kempster stated, "Since 1973, a little-known Pentagon agency has been studying ways to plug a computer into an individual's brain waves . . . The Advanced Research Projects Agency says the $1-million-a-year program has passed its initial laboratory tests and is ready for determination of its military uses." Contracts with UCLA, Stanford and MIT, among others, were listed.

Several independent sources describe Russian mind-control technology in publications such as Defense News<sup>15</sup> which stated, -

Known as acoustic psycho-correction, the capability to control minds and alter behavior of civilians and soldiers may soon be shared with U.S. military, medical and political officials, according to U.S. and Russian sources.

The Russian authors of a paper quoted in the story wrote:

As far as it has become possible to probe and correct psychic contents of human beings despite their will and consciousness by instrumental means . . . results having been achieved can get out of [our] control and be used with inhumane purposes of manipulating psyches. . . . World opinion is not ready for dealing appropriately with the problems coming from the possibility of direct access to the human mind.

Although "U.S. sources said government officials and leaders from the business and medical communities will consider Russian offers to place the mind-control capability under bilateral controls."<sup>16</sup> It is not hard to imagine intelligence agencies racing to find computer-brain weapons before the other side gains the advantage.

In addition, International Healthline Corp. is planning to bring a team of Russian specialists here within the next couple of months to demonstrate the capability, company president Jim Hovis said in a Dec. 2 interview.<sup>17</sup>

After 30 years of classified research, the U.S. government is starting to openly use electromagnetic warfare technology in police forces, prisons and the military. Articles in the last five years include "MC-Ultra [sic] Program, Use of mind-control equipment by armed forces . . ." (Stolitsa, November 2, 1992), "Brainwash killers still in use," (The Herald (Glasgow), May 26, 1995) and others.<sup>18</sup> Many of these articles describe nonlethal, electromagnetic, behavior-control weapons and related topics such as the USA Today piece discussing a South Carolina lawmaker's proposal to use the Global Positioning Satellite system to track parolees.<sup>19</sup>

San Quentin, A Plausible Site For Mind-Control Experiments

During the 1960s and 1970s, prison life in California was vastly different from today. It reflected the hippie movement, President Kennedy's vision of Camelot and the radical Berkeley protesters' disillusionment. Berkeley was a hotbed of intellectual thought on Third World politics, and the prison system was undergoing a social reform. Rehabilitation was in vogue. Eric Cummins' The Rise and Fall of California's Radical Prison Movement described it best;<sup>20</sup> my experiences fit his factual account. I was sentenced before [REDACTED] successfully challenged the indeterminate-sentencing law. If not for her efforts, I might still be in prison.

There were many reasons for the anger and violence displayed by San Quentin prisoners at the time, and "[o]n Jan. 12-16, 1967, a massive prison disturbance brought the simmering situation in the institution to a boil."<sup>21</sup> Black prisoners wanted better jobs, training and representation. I was in a cell next to George Jackson, a radical who was later killed by the guards. I also knew Caryl Chessman, whose worldwide appeals taught the prison administration a lesson about how much trouble an educated prisoner could be, but who was nevertheless executed in 1960. Caryl got me interested in law.

Sirhan Sirhan, convicted of assassinating Robert Kennedy, was also there and on the same chief-of-the-prisons (Dr. Eduard Simpson-Kallas)'s psychological testing program that I was. Dr. Simpson-Kallas and Dr. Schmidt, chief psychiatrist for the prison, disagreed with Associate Warden James Parks about Sirhan's sanity. Dr. Simpson-Kallas felt that Sirhan had been hypnotized and did not plan the assassination. Mr. Parks stopped Dr. Simpson-Kallas from examining Sirhan, and, after a clean, six-year record with the prison, Dr. Simpson-Kallas handed in his resignation over this disagreement.<sup>22</sup>

Another U.S. Government Cover-up: Who Will Tell The Public?

When I was transferred to Vacaville Medical Prison, the prison psychiatrist there tried to give me electroshock therapy. My mother refused to sign the papers, however. I believe that they wanted to discredit me so that I could never testify or stop their behavior-control experiments. Since I was released in 1977, I have been working to expose the M.I.N.D. device.

I hope to prove in court that Mr. Parks knew about this experimentation but signed a national security oath to keep silent. There has been a growing bureaucracy to enforce national secrecy among the many government and private research institutions, and security is the overriding factor in these court cases—even when laws are proven to have been broken.

Mr. Parks worked at Vacaville Medical Prison when Dr. William C. Keating, Jr. and Dr. Ralph Urbino, a retired Air Force man, formed the nonprofit, tax-exempt and shadowy Solano Institute for Medical and Psychiatric Research (SIMPR). This may have been a front organization for funding the experiments performed on me by the CIA. Books describing illegal and inhumane experiments at Vacaville include Jessica Mitford's Kind and Usual Punishment,<sup>23</sup> which describes "hideous tests," and John Marks' Search For the Manchurian Candidate.<sup>24</sup> While a prisoner in 1965, I played bridge with Dr. Keating, high-ranking officers from Travis AFB, and professors and their wives from the local universities.<sup>25</sup> I made some enemies with my political views. Two years later, the mind control began.

I also hope to prove in court that the former director of the California Department of Corrections, Raymond Procunier, an ex-Navy man and Ronald Reagan appointee, had knowledge of the experiments with the M.I.N.D. device.<sup>26</sup> He also would have had a security clearance. In 1973, California governor Reagan announced a proposal by Dr. Louis Jolyon ("Jolly") West, a well-known CIA consultant and chief of the UCLA Neuropsychiatric Institute, to establish a new "Center for the Study of Violent Behavior." His proposal was to include a study of prisoners. I believe that the public outcry against this proposal caused the related behavior research to go underground.

Top MK-ULTRA Scientist Denies Government Report on Vacaville Prison CIA "Sleeper Lab"

<sup>25</sup>For corroboration of this unexpected socializing, see the San Francisco Chronicle story of February 26, 1970, which reported that a convicted murderer went to court claiming that his exclusion from the Vacaville Medical Facility's bridge club violated his rights. Deciding against him, the superior court judge said, "It is a rule that men guilty of such crimes are not permitted to come in contact with the public, particularly with women, who may come to the facility to play bridge with inmates." (Emphasis added.)

<sup>26</sup>Procunier later became director of corrections for the State of Utah and is now director of the Nevada Department of Corrections in Carson City. [REDACTED] believes that his rapid advancement coming out of the relatively obscure Vacaville prison was due to Procunier's expertise in the field of mind control.

CIA provided Dr. [James] Hamilton funds to set up and operate a so-called 'sleeping laboratory,' whereby he could do his own research but would be available to do research for CIA at the agency's request. . . . In contrast to the description in the 1965 document, Hamilton stated further that CIA never in fact utilized the laboratory before it was shut down.

In light of my experience and considering that Dr. Hamilton was a West Coast supervisor for MK-ULTRA research for the CIA,<sup>27</sup> I believe he may have misrepresented facts in the name of national security.

An International Human Rights Issue

Today, victims are organizing: David Fratus has fought to publicize his case in Utah; Perry Dardar of Louisiana describes the same type of experiment that I endured; Gregory Lambros, another prisoner, even has hired a law firm to organize a mind-control database for victims. Therapist Betsy Russell-Manning has written a book called Mind Control in U.S. Prison System.<sup>28</sup>

- Looking back to 1967, I see that we have made great progress against tremendous odds. In prison, time takes on a new meaning; I learned that I must be patient—but persistent. I hope that victims will contact me so that we can make consistent progress as a group.
