

SCIENCE&TECHNOLOGY

TOPIC: UFO

TIME: 03/22 3:04 PM

TO: ALL

FROM: WARREN BARNES (VMWS54A)

SUBJECT: BREAK-IN

According to an article in the Computer Underground Digest a number of hackers, with the aid of 'sympathetic' military officials broke into a number of computer networks that supposedly contained UFO related information.

Using stolen military TAC-IDs they were able to retrieve info on aliens, UFOs, and what the gov is doing with the downed craft. The article I read was not the original CUD one but appeared in a newsletter and the information was highly fragmented. So it would be very difficult to post it in any legible manner. However some interesting tidbits included talk of ufo screening nets across the US where the crafts are tracked, downed craft in possession of gov and gov related companies, the people involved with the projects, those in charge of the projects security, area 51, people on the gov do-do list because they got too close (includes T. Goode, R. Lazar, W. Strieber), star wars project (and 23 scientists killed over 6 years), etc, etc, etc.

As the post pointed out a lot of this can be attributed to hacker folk-lore but then again...

Even more interesting the note was accompanied with a number of DDN locations including host and gateway addresses, net points, and what appear to be internet addresses where the information can be found.

Now, I really wonder about that.

Anyone ever hear of this occurrence?

I plan to gather some information about those sites and see if they are indeed repositories of ultra top secret info or what.

I don't think that is the case.