

CBS Special Assignment: "UFO Project"

Aired Wednesday, May 23, 2001, at 11 p.m.

By Dan Willis

On May 21st a CBS News Special Assignment team came down from Los Angeles and did a lengthy interview with Dan Willis, a military top-secret witness for the Disclosure Project and Rob Baldwin Director of the San Diego UFO Society. The reporter was given this assignment because the upper management saw the CNN Headline News broadcast of the Disclosure Project at the National Press Club in Washington DC.

CBS in Los Angeles contacted Mr. Baldwin through the local CBS affiliate in San Diego, which covered a story concerning a gigantic whirlpool off the coast of San Diego. CBS interviewed Rob Baldwin regarding the possibility of this phenomena being a UFO underwater, also known as a USO, (Unidentified Submerged Object) creating the enormous, never before seen, whirlpool. There was an opposing explanation from Scripts Institute of Oceanography, saying that it was just a natural occurring phenomenon, even though no one had ever seen anything even close to this in San Diego. I was informed by Mr. Baldwin that it was mentioned to him that the Scripts Institute of Oceanography was strongly opposed to the release of this media exposure and tried to stop this piece from being aired with a threat of legal action against the CBS station affiliate KFMB Channel 8 in San Diego. The UFO whirlpool story drew so much traffic on the KFMB.com web site that it actually overloaded and shutdown the site which they linked to the San Diego UFO Societies web site www.sdufo.com regarding the UFO interests.

Mr. Baldwin told CBS that he knew one of the 21 witnesses that appeared in Washington DC for the Disclosure Project and that he would be willing to do an interview with them as well. Before the meeting I realized time would be too short to brief them on an overview of the entire Disclosure Project topic. I brought along the 500 page briefing document and the Executive Summary and thought, we are never going to have enough time to do this so that we would both have a clear objective of the course the interview would take. So as any other top-secret extraterrestrial military witness professional would do, I got out my drawing pad and proceeded to draw some cartoons.

Upon meeting the reporter, I held up the briefing documents and said we can review this or if you prefer I have drawn out a quick visual aid. The impressive well researched documentation that Dr. Greer and Prof. Loder put together added greatly to the credibility but she had a sigh of relief when I brought out the cartoon pictures.

The drawings historically sequenced through the steps of early ET visitations in the 40's and the reason for cover-up of ET crash retrievals and highly classified dissemination of these intergalactic vehicles to corporations which derived through reverse engineering many technologies which were released to the public and many which remained highly classified in the interest of national security. Then showing the turning point of control from our known constitutional government to the illegal covert operations within the government structure that is orchestrated by financial controlling powers of the world and their destructive dead end course of control and profit at the sacrifice of everything else. Now for the first time a civilian organized group has been able to pierce this veil of secrecy with hundreds of credible witnesses each with a piece of a larger picture showing that we have the ability to change this course for the entire planet. We have the ability to circumvent inevitable destruction though the disclosure of the ET presence and the suppressed technologies. This knowledge would lead to the banning of any space weaponry and would open up a cultural exchange with other beings of the universe that the modern world has never seen.

Although this reporter had done some preliminary research on the subject, using the disclosureproject.org web site, she was surprised at the fact that congressional hearings were being sought for the release of suppressed technologies that could end the energy crisis.

I made it clear to her that the entire purpose of my interview is to state one thing and that is that "we have a solution to the energy crisis" and are willing to bring forth the scientists to prove before a scientific inquiry board before congress that these technologies can give free non-polluting energy and have been suppressed for over 50 years. It is critical for the future of Earth to have this released now.

Although there are many aspects of the deeply complex Disclosure Project, I chose to focus on the "solution to the energy crisis" topic because, when I was meeting with members of congress and the senate we sat in on some hearings and the number one topic was on energy shortages and pollution problems. People are concerned about daily functioning with enough electricity to do their work and gasoline to get to work and about the air they breath especially in Los Angeles, California. This comes down to the necessity of making money and health concerns of the average person. This is of a much higher priority in terms of day-to-day life rather than whether or not ETs exist. With energy crisis and pollution problems in the headlines, one would think that anyone saying they have a solution would cause everyone to be all ears. That is the objective. The rest of the complex aspects of how we have this solution, and how it's origin was derived through reverse engineering ET craft, in addition to the extraterrestrials, the covert government operations, space weapons etc. will naturally unfold into the full story when the testimonies of hundreds of credible witnesses are allowed to be heard in open congressional hearings.

The reporter promised me that the solution to the energy crisis would be included in the broadcast. In the majority of the interview I focused on the fact that we have ET derived technologies that we are sitting on that can help an ailing planet now. My reasoning behind this is when people hear on a newscast that the Disclosure Project is saying that UFOs are Real and ETs exist and that they have hundreds of witnesses to prove it and they are seeking congressional hearings but no hearings are planned, without a single mention of suppressed technologies that need to be released. The common reaction is "wow that's interesting, I knew there had to be something to all that with all those UFO reports, but with all the current critical problems in the world I doubt Washington is going to give it much priority, but good for Dr. Greer for taking that bold approach"

So the day after the interview before the broadcast the reporter called me up and left a very apologetic message on my voicemail saying...

"Oh gosh I don't know how to say this... I had some problems with the piece and basically I was told I had to cut a lot of the good points.... But it's still a decent piece it still gets the Disclosure Project out there, and the fact that people are asking for hearings. Unfortunately it hadn't gone the way I had planned it."

Later after the piece had aired we spoke directly and the reporter shared that... -

"There was not enough time in this short segment to cover basically anything else other than we are seeking congressional hearings regarding the extraterrestrials"

Again I emphasized that the public needs to be made aware that we are asking open congressional hearings to release the suppressed technologies that can solve the energy and pollution crisis.

She replied that it would be possibly too much information for the public to deal with at once. I told her that she may be right and that we should have a follow up interview with the scientists such as Prof. Loder and Lt. Col. Bearden or other qualified scientists as a series explaining to the public what the Disclosure Project is about in greater depth than the mere postulation of the existence of extraterrestrial life visiting us.

She said that she would be glad to do that but her higher executives would not allow her to touch the story until November, being the next network ratings period and would be the only time considered in the interest of ratings.

Again I alluded to the fact that if this subject was to have a series done on it, that I promised her there would be an inexhaustible amount of information that would keep all the viewers glued to their screens all the way to November.

We concluded that she would call me sometime before November for the next interview.

The reporter honestly did her best to create a good report and she was right the report was put out there with a sincere tone to it. I thank CBS for that. Also I can understand the higher executives being concerned that unfolding more of this than what CNN has exposed may be a bit much for the public to process. It appears this is the time for the UFO/ET reality news announcements that will open the doors for the more in-depth series reporting which this subject needs full coverage of, being the most important news story ever in modern history.

INTERVIEW OF PHILIP CORSO, JR.

Philip Corso, Jr.: You be careful that many kids in the car now, don't let them distract you.

Interviewer 1: This is part of the stack of documents, memoirs of Colonel Corso, which show the extraordinary ... this document ...

Philip Corso, Jr.: This is a comparison chart that my father did that we just read, Mr. Kent, the lawyer, just read in Journeys Beyond in Fort Walton Beach. It is a comparison document between the EB [unclear] and the human being just put together by an old intelligence officer, my father. He would never change the story and I find that pretty remarkable because my wife and I sat many times and we've looked at each other said, "do you believe ... [tape abruptly paused].

... put an image or so or just wasn't there. Should I tell this guy or should I not tell this guy? He just [tape abruptly paused].

Interviewer 1: ... stress analysis?

Interviewee 2: Yes, behaviors, manners and stuff like that.

Philip Corso, Jr.: Well, that is one that [inaudible]. In that four years before he passed away.

Interviewer 1: Does your mother know? [tape abruptly paused].

Philip Corso, Jr.: The next time he was in 1957 after he took command of the 552 Missile Battalion he had several incidents in the desert. One of them is a cave that the GI showed them that was there and it was all these animals, and had water in the cave, and it was a cool place to go to at the desert and often many of the men would go up there and himself on ... just for excursion and something to do. You guys have to understand Red Canyon is very isolated. There's no stores or anything around. They built a church there, which I think was highly interesting.

Later on, there is a story that involves that but anyway he went to this cave and when he was in the cave he tells the story of the first meeting with the alien in the cave. You want me to go into detail on that?

Interviewer 1: Yes, that's very important.

Philip Corso, Jr.: He said he was kind of laying back sleeping, relaxing, dozing off and all of a sudden he rolled over and pulled his gun. They always wore their gun whenever they were off their post up there. He pulled the gun and pointed it towards this form he says. He didn't recognize what the form was so he asked, "friend or foe?" The form said, "neither." But he was very, very upset because the message came mentally and he figures how in the heck is this thing, and what is it and what is it doing? He later sees it moves a little bit and he sees that it has a type of helmet on with a type of stone on the center of its head on a band. He drew pictures of it or had an artist draw it.

This creature asked him to shut down his radars for 15 minutes. He says that he figured in his head how does this thing know that I'm the only person that could give that command to shut these radars down? He asked the creature, "well why should I do it or what's in it for me?" The creature answered, "a new world if you can take it." At the time, that had little or no meaning to him only in later days did it have a meaning to it. He went out of the cave, called Sergeant Rex up told him to shut down the radars and he says that as he was leaving the cave he sees the creature standing at the end of the cave and he does kind of a gesture with his hand which wasn't a salute or wasn't a wave or anything but he saluted it back. That was basically the end of the encounter there.

Interviewer 1: Where did it go? Did they go into a ship?

Philip Corso, Jr.: No, he never said. But later on his radars they picked up, this is the same year '57 and I don't know the exact date, but he left 12 hours of film that gives exacting details. They picked up a ship moving over 3,000 miles an hour through the atmosphere. It went down near Red Canyon. He had a light airplane then and he got the pilot and he flew up and looked around and saw a shiny object on the ground. He figured that he would investigate closer by himself so he landed, did not take anybody with him, got one of the old staff cars, went out into the desert and he says he found a craft.

He says it was perfectly smooth, it was oval shaped, more like a cigar than a saucer, stuck into a side resting against a rock sideways. He said this thing would fade out completely and then fade back in. He thought he was hallucinating and he couldn't figure this out, what was going on. He was scared to death he says but he managed to take a tumbleweed and throw under it when it was gone just to see if he was hallucinating or if it was real. It came back again, he says that he touched it. It was cool to the touch on the side. He says when it disappeared again or went back out of faze again the tumbleweed was crushed so he knew it was physical. He said there were footprints around the craft.

I always felt like there was more there that he hasn't told, just my personal feeling because you don't see footprints in a craft, I don't think, without having a second encounter but that's my own personal view. He says the ship began to vibrate, he says he got scared and jumped back in the staff car, threw it in reverse, he went flying backwards and he says the motor stalled. He said he saw the thing rise up, turn, and go up into the air, and then it went into an envelope that it kind of inflated [phonetic] into. He says that later on he told Bon Bon [phonetic] about it, he told Obert about it, which were on his scientific teams. He knew them because he was in charge of Operation Paper Clip for President Eisenhower.

So this is a man of credentials telling a story like this. My wife and I always said this story is bull, you know are we to believe him? I must say this about my father, when you see his presence on film and if you knew my father for only a few minutes, he never would change his story. He would never make the fish longer, and when he told the story he would tell it in front of anybody, he didn't care who they were, credibility, credentials or whatever. He would tell it the same as he would tell any other stories about MIAs, or so like that or such.

[Pause]

Philip Corso, Jr.: ... yeah, they would do research for the White House, they were part of Operation Paper Clip. They would do research, for instance, if you want to know one of them, my dad was the declassifying officer on the project Terizon [phonetic]. See President Kennedy really didn't do such a great thing when he said we're going to send a moon landing by whenever it was 1967, or whenever he promised, the end of 1969. That had actually all been proposed in project Terizon.

Obviously, I would say that the President probably knew about this because it was classified at the time. Later on when it was put into the book, my dad was the declassifying officer on that so he knew it was ... I remember seeing that as a boy by accident. I picked it up off his desk one day and it was about an inch thick and it had all color photos in it. I said, "wow look at this space stuff." Of course, I didn't know what it was, if it was a fiction book or what it was but I do remember seeing it. [Pause]

He speaks of a man named Wilbert Smith, which was a great investigator of UFOs and phenomenon, built a lot of machinery for magnetism and tested the lines that was Canadian.
